Pope: poor at center of Gospel

VATICAN CITY (CNS) - Evangelizing the poor is central to the Gospel message and is less about giving social assistance than about converting hearts and healing wounds, Pope Francis said.

A Christian is a missionary called "to proclaim the Gospel with words and, even before that, with one's life," he said Jan. 24 before reciting the Angelus with visitors gathered in St. Peter's Square.

"To evangelize the poor: this is the mission of Jesus, according to what he himself says," the pope said. "This is also the mission of the church and of every person baptized in the church. In the day's Gospel reading from St. Luke, Jesus in the synagogue of Nazareth proclaims the fulfillment of Isaiah's call to "bring glad tidings to the poor."

Jesus' words, Pope Francis said, summarize the work of evangelization and demonstrate his priority for "those who are furthest away: the suffering, the sick and those discarded by society. What does it mean to evangelize the poor?" the pope asked.

"It means above all being close to them, having the joy of serving them, freeing them from oppression, and all this in the name of and with the spirit of Christ, because he is the Gospel of God, he is the mercy of God, he is the liberation of God. It is he who was made poor in order to enrich us with his poverty," he said.

Year of Consecrated Life concludes

With the Feast of the Presentation, Feb. 2, the worldwide celebration of the Year of Consecrated Life came to an end. Bishop Terry R. LaValley shared a message about the year noting that "although their numbers have diminished significantly, the impact of the ministry of these women and men on the lives of the faithful continues to be strong."

Brigid Duffy, Lillia Campeau, Anna Scott and Grace Brink are all smiles as their school - Augustinian Academy in Carthage - joins other Catholic schools across the country for the annual celebration of Catholic Schools Jan. 1 to Feb. 6. The NCC takes part in the celebration with special reflections on Catholic schools by Bishop Terry R. LaValley, St. Joseph Sister Ellen Rose Coughlin, diocesan superintendent of schools; and a trio of seniors from Seton Catholic in Plattsburgh.

Hooray for our Catholic schools!

As a great fan of Catholic education, it's always a joy to hear about all the ways that Catholic schools in the Diocese of Ogdensburg are celebrating themselves. Catholic Schools Week started this past Sunday and continues through Saturday, offering a perfect opportunity to salute the students and teachers who fill classrooms across the diocese.

Special activities at Seton, IHIC and all the schools will help the children to understand what makes their Catholic school so important.

At Immaculate Heart Central High School in Watertown, for example, every morning this week opens with prayers of thanksgiving for Catholic education and families.

Activities during the week include Dove Day with ABC Prayers, blessing of the throats and a day long retreat. There will also be sporting contests, Crazy Sock Day and family breakfasts but the focus is certainly on the Catholic in Catholic school.

For this week's focus on Catholic schools in the NCC, Sister Ellen Rose Coughlin, diocesan superintendent, asks and answers the critical question: “How is a Catholic school unique? What does it offer that is distinct from public education?”

Parents who make great sacrifices to send their children to our schools would certainly agree with her response: “Christ is the gift that students encounter in our Catholic schools. And from this gift comes so much more, namely a supernatural vision of life, an awareness of the dignity of the human person, the experience of a faith community, a curriculum which acknowledges the relationship between faith and culture and the value of teachers and administrators.”

This is true in 2016 and it was true back in 1960 when I first stepped into Sister St. Thomas’ first grade classroom at Bishop Conroy Memorial School.

So, for me and others, I'm sure, Catholic Schools Week is a time to remember and appreciate our own Catholic school experiences.

There's no question that the Grey Nuns in my grade school and Jesuit priests in college had a profound influence of every aspect of my life. I'm sure that my Catholic friends taught by Sisters of St. Joseph, Ursulines, Mercy Sisters Brothers of Christian Instruction, Servites or Dominicans would say the same.

Yesterday and today, our Catholic schools were communities of faith, knowledge and service offering great blessings to every student and to every parish in the North Country.

A PASTOR’S PERSPECTIVE

Is anything more important than mercy?

I would like to share with you some ideas that I discovered from a recent book by Pope Francis, “The Name of God is Mercy.”

This book is the result of an interview that Pope Francis gave to the Vatican Reporter, Andrea Tornelli. As the title indicates the interview concerns Pope Francis’ message of God’s mercy. He also explains his reasons for proclaiming the Jubilee Year of Mercy.

I found the reporter’s questions to be very personal – and Pope Francis answers them honestly. They certainly reflect his deep spirituality and profound faith in God’s loving mercy. The book became a spiritual journey for me. I often paused to meditate on his thoughts and answer these questions myself.

Pope Francis speaks of how many people think he is speaking and writing too much about mercy. His response was simply to give a definition of mercy to demonstrate how important the whole notion of mercy is. For him nothing can be more important for our Church.

His definition is this: “Mercy is the divine attitude which embraces, it is God’s giving himself to us, accepting us, and bowing to forgive. Mercy is God’s identity card – the Name of God is Mercy.” Can anything be more important?

He adds this: “The Church does not wait for the wounded to knock on her doors, she looks for them in the streets, she gathers them in, she embraces them, she takes care of them, she makes them feel loved.”

I was thrilled and inspired by the Pope’s words. They are so powerful, so challenging for me as a priest. I stopped to question myself of how I matched up to his image of a merciful and compassionate priest and confessor. Pope Francis lays down a challenge for all of us priests.

One of the questions that Pope Francis was asked truly caused me to take some time for meditation and consideration. He was asked, “When you think of merciful priests whom you have met or who have inspired you, who comes to mind?” Pope Francis answers very precisely – he takes the trouble to name some priests who have inspired him.

Pope Francis tells a story about one of these priests, a certain Father Leopold. He says: “A priest, a friend of mine, who went to confess to him, said, ‘Father, you are too generous. I am glad to have gone to confession to you, but it seems to me that you are too generous.’” And Father Leopold said to him: “But who has been generous, my son? It was the Lord who was generous, I wasn’t the one who died for our sins, it was the Lord who died for our sins. How could he have been more generous with the thief, with others than this!”

So, I took some time to think back over my life, remembering those priests, many of them my friends, who demonstrated so well being a merciful and caring priest. I thought of many who impressed me so much and became examples for me. I thought of many who touched my life and truly changed me because of their compassion as a confessor.

I pray that all us, priests, continue to develop our understanding of the mercy and love of God for all people – for saints and sinners – through our homilies and as confessors.

I pray especially for our young priests that they will recognize this call from Pope Francis to show and guide others with the merciful spirit of Our Savior. I pray that they will discover examples to show them the way – so that they may develop a merciful spirit in their ministry. I would hope that there will be an increase in priests, especially loving and compassionate priests.

I believe that the spirit and the leadership of Pope Francis will help to demonstrate the heart and soul of the priestly vocation to those who hear God’s all.

I like to believe that it will be a thrilling moment for those who realize that the can bring God’s love and mercy to God’s people in our parishes.
Communities of Faith, Knowledge and Service

From January 31 to February 6, we celebrate National Catholic Schools Week. This Jubilee Year of Mercy provides us with a graced opportunity in which to reflect on how our Catholic schools help to form the minds and touch the hearts of our youth with Christian values that inspire genuine concern for every person made in God’s image and likeness.

As part of their religion curriculum, our students study and reflect upon the Gospels. Here they learn about Jesus’ compassionate care and tender mercy for all of God’s children. As they come to know and celebrate the great gifts we have in each of the Sacraments, our students experience the power of God’s grace and forgiveness. The Gospel value of giving respect to the dignity of every human person, a prerequisite for mercy, is a fundamental lesson in all course work.

Every member of the Catholic school family applies this lesson of mercy each day in the classrooms, ball fields, basketball courts, cafeterias, the hallways and even in the principal’s office.

More and more, our culture has dropped “mercy” as a virtue to be embraced. In a countercultural spirit, our schools work hard to provide an environment where mercy is not seen as a sign of weakness, but as a characteristic of the truly virtuous person.

Mercy is more than an abstract concept to be learned, but a lesson to be lived. To that end, the Community Service Programs of our Catholic schools enable our students to participate in a variety of works of mercy in the local neighborhoods.

Academic excellence continues to be a hallmark of our schools. Inasmuch as schoolwork is graded justly (tempered with mercy, I’m sure), our Catholic schools maintain high academic standards.

Our gifted teachers encourage and expect self-discipline and good study habits from our students while using the latest technology in our classrooms.

Partnering with our parents, our Catholic Schools are truly Communities of Faith, Knowledge and Service. Through the exercise of these integral dimensions of Catholic school life, our schools develop a culture of hope for tomorrow because students develop the self-confidence and community-mindedness that are essential features of a healthy society. Our Catholic Christian faith instills in us the courage to walk the journey of faith Christ-led, Christ-fied, and Hope-filled.

We are so grateful to all those who support our Catholic Schools. They are such a gift to the North Country. I hope that our school families have a wonderful celebration of Catholic Schools Week.

First graders at Trinity Catholic School in Massena recently took an assessment for their Superkids Reading Program in the school’s up-to-date computer lab. Principal Kathleen Behrens reports that the students enjoyed taking the assessments on the computer and their teacher, Mrs. Doe, liked the ease of having all of her students’ scores broken down for her in a way that easily determines their strengths and weaknesses, allowing for her to make modifications in their instruction, as needed. Here, Beckett Sovie focuses as he finishes his assessment.

By Bishop Terry R. LaValley

While the Church closes the Year of Consecrated Life with the celebration of the Feast of the Presentation of the Lord on February 2, we continue to give thanks to God for the tremendous contributions made to the Church and our society through the wide array of ministries undertaken by those in consecrated life, particularly here in the Diocese of Ogdensburg. This Jubilee of Mercy, we are keenly aware of their corporal and spiritual works of mercy among us.

Although their numbers have diminished significantly, the impact of the ministry of these women and men on the lives of the faithful continues to be strong.

As we conclude this year of special celebration, I want to thank Atonement Ellen Donahue, Episcopal Delegate for Religious, for her invaluable assistance to the Diocese, and the Council of Religious, particularly for their coordinating efforts throughout the Year of Consecrated Life.

In addressing our Diocesan Priority of Creating a Culture of Vocations, let us intensify our prayer and invite young women and men in our parishes to consider a vocation to serve the Lord as a consecrated Religious. Generous hearts given unconditionally to the Lord and His Church bestow and receive boundless blessings.

These five Sisters of St. Joseph, shown at their motherhouse in Watertown, are among the consecrated Religious who have offered decades of service to the Diocese of Ogdensburg. At the conclusion of the Year of Consecrated Life Feb. 2, Bishop LaValley said, “We continue to give thanks to God for the tremendous contributions made to the Church and our society by those in consecrated life, particularly here in the Diocese of Ogdensburg.” From left are Sisters Ronald Marie Hax, Marie Angele Ellis, Gabriel Marie Meyer, M. Three seniors at Seton Catholic discuss the value of their Catholic education

By Shawn Ryan
Staff writer

PLATTSBURGH—With Catholic Schools Week upon us, three seniors at Seton Catholic Central reflected on what it means to attend a Catholic school, as opposed to one of the many public schools in the area.

Across the board, the consensus is that the focus on Catholic and Christian values learned throughout their academic career at Seton Academy, and later Seton Catholic, has helped set the stage for success in college and beyond. Small class size and the ability and willingness of teachers to truly get to know and care about their students, is the other factor that sets Seton apart from public schools.

Walking Seton’s hallways, it quickly becomes apparent that there is a comradery not just amongst the rather small senior class, but among all the students at the school regardless of class. Everybody knows his or her classmates, and they get along in a manner not regularly seen in public schools. And the teachers are able to know each of their students. The biggest disciplinary issue of the day: possibly a skipped homework assignment or an un-tucked shirttail.

We spoke with college-bound seniors, Sam Bashaw and sisters Emily and Olivia Nachbauer. All three have been in the Seton system (and St. John’s before the Academy was formed) since third grade. Without hesitation, the trio agreed that they would definitely recommend a Catholic School education to any students considering the possibility.

Olivia Nachbauer

“Just being at a school centered around Christian values, it’s a better sense of morals and a better environment. People are nice, and helpful, and teachers are willing to help you out. People are friendlier. You know all your classmates. When we were in Middle School you worried a little bit about not being cool, but as you get older you start to think about your education and getting into a good college. Being at a private school as opposed to a public school, you have a better chance because of the attention that is given to the individual student.

Your education is greater here because it’s a close knit community of people. If you want to play sports it’s easier, and there are clubs and activities that you can try out. You just get to be yourself. It’s just easier. Plus there’s a great diversity of people here - different races and different religions.”

Emily Nachbauer

“Having religion classes brings attention to the faith that we all have. If we didn’t have religion classes we wouldn’t be as deeply thinking about our faith as we do here. Since Seton is a small school, this brings us closer to each other, and helps bring us closer to our faith because we are able to practice it in our daily lives. Teachers here at Seton care more about us because they know us better than they would in a public school, I think that we are taught more about what we will need for college than at a public school.

“Our workload is a lot more than you would have in a public school. It makes it much easier to transition into college and keep up with the work.

“As for Seton versus a public school, I would just say that a lot of people who thought of leaving and didn’t, really ended up loving it here. It’s just a better place to go because everyone here cares about the students. The teachers care, the principal cares; everyone cares.”

Samantha Bashaw

“I think there’s really a community environment here. With the small size of the school, the relationships form better with the teachers and your classmates. You get the space to grow, and find out who you are here.

“We see more of what is right in school, as opposed to what is wrong. Seton has a reputation to uphold, and we try to live that out to the best of our abilities.

“Our work ethic here is a huge thing for us. Our class has a hugely competitive nature and work ethic, and a lot of that comes from teacher involvement and the faith component. What we’ve learned here will definitely help us in college and in our future lives.

“We’ve had people transfer to the public schools for a year and then return to Seton. It just shows the impact the school has on the students.

“I love this school. For me it’s the people. People might not really realize that it’s the faith aspect of Seton that sets it apart. That’s one thing that is very important for me.”

RCIA teams prepare new people to enter the church

By Julie LaShomb
Diocesan RCIA committee

Rite of Election set for Feb. 14
at St. Mary’s Cathedral

There are people in our parishes Who are anxious to be accepted into the Catholic Faith as full members. They have been discerning through various RCIA (Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults) programs about receiving fully the sacraments many cradle Catholics take for granted. Some were never baptized. They are called catechumens. Others were baptized Christian but for one reason or another never went through the process of receiving the rest of the sacraments. They are called candidates. These people will be acknowledged during the Rite of Acceptance when they will be asked what they want from God’s Church and what faith will offer them.

As members of our parish communities we are asked to support these candidates and catechumens by prayer and good example of Christian living.

Ask your pastor about the programs that are available in your parish. There are many ways you can share your talents in the RCIA program.

The Diocese of Ogdensburg has scheduled sessions for Protecting God’s Children for Adults. Pre-registration online is required in order to participate. Participants may preregister at www.virtus.org by selecting the registration button and following the directions. All employees and volunteers who participate in church sponsored activities with minor are required to participate. Further information is available from Atonement Sister Ellen Donahue, 315-393-2090, ext. 1340.

Pro-Life:
Connecting the Dots

This past month of January has been filled with challenges for us as followers of Jesus to “act with justice and walk humbly with our God.” (Micah 6:8)

On January 11, as a nation, we observed Human Trafficking Awareness Day. Although slavery was abolished 150 years ago, there are more men and women and children in slavery today than ever before in our history.

We are challenged to lift up our voices in prayer, become more informed, and to take action to help end this modern day slavery.

On January 18 we celebrated Martin Luther King Jr. Day. His works and life remind us of the challenge to work towards racial equality and justice for all, as Jesus prays “that all may be One.” (John 17:21)

On January 22 thousands of people from around our Nation set out for Washington to participate in March for Life protesting the legalization of abortion in the U.S. We need to create a climate of support for women facing this choice between life or death for the unborn.

Daily on the news we witness the plight of children, women and men fleeing for their lives from violence, war, famine in Central America, the Middle East, and many parts of the world.

We are again challenged, as citizens of this incredibly blessed Nation, to seek ways to “welcome the stranger,” and communicate this to our legislators.

Our call, as Christians, is not to allow fear alone to dictate our response to the cries of the poor.

How are all of the events connected to “care for our common home”? Pope Francis tells us in Laudato Si (#50) “a true ecological approach always becomes a social approach… and need to hear the cries of the earth and the cries of the poor.”

When people lack the basic necessities of life, they become vulnerable to promises for a better life made by human traffickers, drug dealers, radical military groups.
Catholic Schools: building a bright future

By Sister Ellen Rose Coughlin, SSJ
Superintendent of Schools

There are certain events that mark the passage of each school year. One of these is the annual celebration of Catholic Schools Week. This year’s theme is Catholic Schools: Communities of Faith, Knowledge and Service.

Our Catholic schools offer quality academic programs, but quality academic programs are available in public schools as well. Our schools’ programs address the whole person, but more and more public schools are addressing components of the whole person, the most notable addition being their acknowledged commitment to character education and ethical behavior.

Our Catholic schools are often close knit “communities” where a safe, secure and orderly environment support student learning. Many of the public school districts where our schools are located are relatively small and offer the same benefits.

Thus, the question becomes. How is a Catholic school unique? What does it offer that is distinct from public education?

Christ is the gift that students encounter in our Catholic schools. And from this gift comes so much more, namely a supernatural vision of life, an awareness of the dignity of the human person, the experience of a faith community, a curriculum which acknowledges the relationship between faith and culture and the personal witness of teachers and administrators.

Our Catholic schools see education as a process which forms the whole child not only for this world but also for eternal life. The specific purpose of Catholic education is the formation of students who, animated by the Gospel, will be good citizens of this world and of the world to come. It is neither for this life only that God created us, nor for this life only that our students require an outstanding education. Our students have been created for eternal life. This is the supernatural vision offered in a Catholic school.

The eternal destiny of our students is accompanied by a profound respect for their dignity as human persons, made in the image and likeness of God and called to life in Christ. Catholic schools have their foundation in Christ. The words and deeds of Jesus are central to a school’s program and environment. Christ is not an afterthought or an add-on to the foundational principles of a Catholic school. His words and deeds are the living memory imparted to the students. He is the one who gives meaning to human life. The mystery of the human person becomes clear only in the mystery of Christ, the Word made flesh. The human person does not develop in isolation from others. The person has been created as a social being whose fulfillment is achieved in relationships with others. Thus, community is an essential component in a person’s development. Catholic schools are communities of faith, extensions of the first and essential community of the family and the extended family of the parish. In the school community of faith the student experiences relationships based on the Gospel and the teachings of the Church. These experiences foster good habits or virtues that instill, maintain and cultivate an environment in which the social nature of the human person can develop and flourish.

An integral education seeks to develop gradually and systematically every capability of the human person: intellectual, moral, physical, psychological and spiritual. In pursuit of this, a Catholic school fosters the love for wisdom, for the true and the beautiful, and integrates the Catholic faith with the life and culture of its students. The Catholic school seeks to create the climate in which the student’s faith will gradually mature and the relationship between faith, culture and life are brought into harmony.

Every academic institution imparts values-ideals for which a student is prepared to pursue and eventually achieve. The ideal that provides the foundation for our Catholic schools is a person, Jesus Christ. From Him students discover a supernatural vision of life, the full dignity of the human person, the importance of community and the recognition of the relationship between faith and culture. Christ is the supreme gift that is offered to the students in our Catholic schools. He is the one who leads our students into a bright future in this world and, eventually, in eternal life.

Let me take this opportunity to thank the parents who have chosen a Catholic school for their children. I realize that in many instances this choice brings with it a financial sacrifice. This sacrifice, however, is an investment in your child’s future that will result in benefits for your child, the Church and society.

Likewise, I want to thank the administrators and teachers in our Catholic schools. I am most appreciative for their commitment to our Catholic schools which more often than not is accompanied by a personal financial sacrifice. The Second Vatican Council said it so well. “...Let teachers recognize that the Catholic school depends upon them almost entirely for the accomplishment of its goals and programs” (Decree on Catholic Education, #8). Theirs is a supernatural calling and not simply the exercise of a profession. “The nobility of the task to which teachers are called demands that, in imitation of Christ, the only Teacher, they reveal the Christian message not only by word but also by every gesture of their behavior. (The Catholic School, #43) We are indeed blessed to have administrators and teachers who are willing to assume this noble task.
A DAY FOR UNITY

Annual Diocesan Ecumenical Service held Jan. 17 at St. Peter’s in Plattsburgh opens Week of Prayer for Christian Unity

Christian leaders from throughout Clinton County took part in the 2016 diocesan ecumenical service held Jan. 17 at St. Peter’s Church in Plattsburgh. In front are the Rev. Tim Osborn, pastor of the Seventh Day Adventist Church in Plattsburgh; and the Rev. Robert Svenson, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Plattsburgh; center, the Rev. Edie Poland, pastor of the Methodist Church in Keeseville and Harkness; Bishop Terry R. LaValley and Bob Goetz, lay minister at the Trinity Episcopal Church in Plattsburgh; back, Father Daniel Chapin, pastor in Croghan and chairman of the diocesan ecumenical committee; Bishop Don Ray of the New Jerusalem Church in Plattsburgh; and the Rev. Jeff Long-Middleton, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Plattsburgh.

Iowa priest now famous for celebrating Mass for snow-bound group

By Joanne Fox
Catholic News Service

SIoux City, Iowa (CNS) -- Father Patrick Behm of Le Mars confessed to being overwhelmed by all the attention. "I'm just happy being a simple priest," he insisted. That "simple priest" went viral on social media for celebrating Mass Jan. 23 on the Pennsylvania Turnpike.

Father Behm was returning with others from the Diocese of Sioux City following the annual March for Life rally Jan. 22 in Washington, when Winter Storm Jonas consumed the East Coast. The bus and many other vehicles had to stop on the turnpike because of an accident on the road.

"We were at mile-marker 132.9, and we couldn't go anywhere," he told The Catholic Globe, Sioux City's diocesan newspaper. "We were just biding our time and twiddling our thumbs."

A knock on the door of the bus changed it all for Father Behm and about 500 others.

"It was Bill Dill from the Archdiocese of St. Paul and Minneapolis who told us some people had constructed an altar out of the snow and would I want to celebrate Mass," he said. "I was caught off guard. I thought they had probably found a garbage can and turned it over."

Father Behm added, with a laugh, "Those Minnesotans really know how to build stuff out of snow!"

Although there were about eight priests available to celebrate Mass, the honor of principal celebrant went to Father Behm, "probably because I had my travel Mass kit," he speculated.

When all of the priests gathered to work out the particulars, Father Behm asked who was preaching.

"They all looked at me and said, 'You are,' but I hadn't looked at the readings," he said, referring to the day's Gospel from Matthew. "Thankfully, Father Shaun Haggerty of the Diocese of Sioux Falls (South Dakota) had, and said it would be easy to preach because the Gospel was about how everyone thought Jesus was crazy and they probably thought we were, too."

Distributing Communion to several hundred individuals was next on the to-do list for Father Behm and reminiscent of another Gospel story. "I guess it was kind of like the loaves and fishes because we did have to break up the hosts into small pieces," he said. "I would guess about five pieces were not consumed."

The inclement atmosphere did take a toll on Father Behm, who attributed weathering the cold to "many years of working in the frozen-food section at Hy-Vee (supermarket)."

"I had my coat on under my alb and stole, but I had no chasuble," he said. "When it came time to distribute Communion, I told the others my hands were too numb and they took that on."

Father Behm recounted that the response to the 35-minute service, which started at noon, was gratifying.

Father Behm also stressed the reason behind that Mass was initially the reason for the trip -- the March for Life to overturn the 1973 Supreme Court Roe v. Wade decision, which legalized abortion.

"No mistake about it, the tide is changing and I believe, this is the generation that will see Roe overturned," he said. "Every time I go to the March for Life, the crowd gets younger and younger. Christ was with us in this storm. He's with us in every storm, and it is he who will ultimately bring the victory."
SCRIPTURE REFLECTIONS

Following Jesus with courage, generosity

When you ask children what they want to be when they grow up, the answers range all the way from fireman or astronaut or nurse—to president!

Wouldn’t we be surprised if a child were to tell us that they want to be a “disciple of Jesus”? In the greatest writing of Pope Francis, his encyclical called “The Joy of the Gospel”, our Holy Father tells us that we’re all called to be disciples.

Until every Catholic Christian is convinced of this, the Church will never be what Jesus wants it to be.

This Sunday’s readings are all about the call of both Isaiah and Peter to answer God’s call. They both felt unworthy to accept, but finally have the courage to say “yes.”

Isaiah has a vision of God sitting on his throne, trying to find someone to clean up the disastrous mess left by King Uzziah.

After an angel has touched his lips with a burning coal, Isaiah cries out, “Here I am—send me”.

In the Gospel, Jesus has been preaching to the crowds from a fishing boat. He finally turns to the frustrated fisherman who has nothing to show for the night’s work and says, “Put out into deep water and lower your nets for a catch.”

Peter reluctantly does as the Master asks, and, to his surprise, finds the nets almost breaking with the weight of hundreds of large fish. He calls for help to the second boat. Peter falls to his knees and cries out “Depart from me Lord, for I am a sinful man”.

Jesus says in reply, “Do not be afraid; from now on, you will be catching men”.

Peter and his fellow fishermen, James and John, immediately leave the means of their livelihood for a life filled with uncertainty and danger.

What courage and generosity of heart it took for Peter and his companions, as well as for Isaiah in the Old Testament to answer the Lord’s call. But they transformed the lives of thousands!

The season of Lent begins this Wednesday. It’s a perfect time for us to reflect on the urgings of Pope Francis to overcome our fear of being unworthy, as well as our indifference to the crisis of our present times.

In what ways will we accept the level of discipleship to which Christ is personally calling us?

Kids’ questions become a book by Pope Francis

By Cindy Wooden
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Children may say the darnedest things, but when it comes to questions about faith they can make even the most learned parents and priests pause.

“These are tough,” Pope Francis said when presented with questions from 30 children from around the world.

Jesuit Father Antonio Spadaro, who went through the questions with the pope, half the time he personally was stamped when thinking about how he would have responded. But the pope wasn’t.

The questions, illustrated with the drawings of the children ages 6-13, and the pope’s answers will be published March 1 as the book “Dear Pope Francis.”

“What did God do before the world was made?” one child asked. “Do bad people have a guardian angel, too?” asked another.

In the book, coordinated and published by the U.S.-based Loyola Press, Pope Francis responds to those and 28 other queries; some of the questions are theological, others are practical and a few are about the pope personally, including what he wanted to be when he grew up.

To the question about what God was doing before creation, the heart of the pope’s answer is, “Think of it this way: Before creating anything, God loved. That’s what God was doing: God was loving.”

Questions about Jesus, war and peace and about heaven also are included, though Father Spadaro was keeping those exact questions and answers under wraps during a late January interview.

Some of the personal questions made Pope Francis laugh and the pope’s answers to those questions made Father Spadaro laugh, the Jesuit said. The pope admits in the book that when he was small he wanted to be a butcher because the butcher his grandmother bought meat from had an apron with a big pocket that seemed to be full of money.

The children’s questions are “simple, but not silly,” said Father Spadaro, who discussed them with Pope Francis and recorded his answers.

The children’s questions about Jesus, war and peace, and personal questions about the pope are ‘simple, but not silly’

Father Spadaro heads La Civita Cattolica, a Jesuit journal filled with articles on philosophy, theology, literary criticism and political theory. He has never worked with young children and said he was in awe of how the pope handled the questions — taking them seriously and responding to them honestly and clearly.

Some of the pope’s answers, he said, are “inspired.”

“This is important,” Father Spadaro said. “It says a lot about the magisterium of Pope Francis; he knows his ministry can reach children.”

At the request of Loyola Press, Father Spadaro asked Pope Francis last May if he would be willing to do the book. “The pope said yes immediately, with enthusiasm,” Father Spadaro said.

Loyola Press then reached out to dozens of Jesuits and collaborators around the globe, asking them to solicit questions and drawings from children. Sometimes Loyola had to ship off crayons, markers and paper because the children had none.

In the end, 259 children in 26 countries submitted questions. The big batch of letters are in 14 languages and come from children in wealthy cities, poor rural areas and even refugee centers.

In August, Father Spadaro read the letters out loud to the pope in Italian, but the pope also scrutinized the drawings, the Jesuit said. He commented on the scenes and colors and often had a good laugh over the way the kids drew the pope.

For the answers, “I was not just taking dictation,” Father Spadaro said. The pope enjoys a conversation; for the book, that meant the pope would sometimes discuss the questions and potential answers with the Jesuit scribe and, often, would return to add something to an answer after they had already moved on to other letters.

“He’s a volcano,” Father Spadaro said.

The pope would look off into space as if picturing the children and responding to them in person, usually in Spanish, but sometimes in Italian, the Jesuit said.

The questions stayed with the pope, who later referred to some of them in speeches and homilies, he said.

The most noticeable example was the question from 8-year-old Ryan in Canada about what God was doing before creation.

In the pope’s unscripted talk at the Festival of Families in Philadelphia in September, Pope Francis told the crowd, “A young person once asked me — you know how young people ask hard questions! — ‘Father, what did God do before he created the world?’”

“Believe me, I had a hard time answering that one,” the pope admitted in Philadelphia. “I told him what I am going to tell you now. Before he created the world, God loved, because God is love.”
“The mind is its own place, and in itself/Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven.” These words from poet John Milton’s 17th-century epic “Paradise Lost” capture at least one theme of the poignant, multifaceted drama “Room” (A24).

As a tale of confinement and isolation with far-reaching and universal implications, director Lenny Abrahamson’s somber but ultimately hopeful parable might also be said to recall Daniel Defoe’s novel “Robinson Crusoe,” published a little over 350 years after Milton’s classic work.

In lieu of the shipwrecked sailor Crusoe, screenwriter Emma Donoghue’s script, adapted from her 2010 novel, gives us two characters caught in a more modern form of exile: a 5-year-old named Jack (Jacob Tremblay) and his unnamed mother, known to him - and to us - simply as Ma (Brie Larson).

Two years before Jack was born, Ma was kidnapped by a sexual predator they both refer to as Old Nick (Sean Bridgers) who has kept her locked in a backyard shed equipped with an elaborate security system ever since. Born and raised within this confined space, Jack - whom Ma loves deeply, despite the circumstances of his conception - is confused by tales of an outside world he has only experienced through television.

When an opportunity for escape presents itself, however, Jack must rally his courage to seize the moment.

Donoghue and Abrahamson successfully render everyday life as an alien environment for their youthful, bewildered protagonist, who also narrates.

Additionally, their film subtly examines human adaptability, the power of imagination and the ironies underlying what appears, on the surface, to be an all-too-straightforward situation. Viewers of faith will particularly appreciate the movie’s biblical overtones.

Besides the fact that the villain’s moniker has traditionally been used as a nickname for Satan, they’ll notice the implicit parallel drawn between Jack’s never-barbered hair and the unshorn, strength-conveying locks of Samson as described in the Book of Judges. The ruse by which Jack and Ma hope to obtain their freedom, moreover, involves a form of death, burial and resurrection.

But if ordinary reality is, in one sense, the heaven to which they both aspire -- a point reinforced by Ma’s quiet rendition of the traditional folk song “Big Rock Candy Mountain” -- it also represents the fallen world into which they are in danger of passing should they abandon the safe parameters of the titular space.

This skillful interplay of apparently contrary ideas -- a redemption and liberation that is also, at some level, the surrender of the main characters’ shared Eden -- sets “Room” far above ordinary movie fare.

So, too, does the emotional wallop it delivers, thanks in no small measure to Larson’s outstanding performance as well as the deep appeal Tremblay evokes.

Given its moral significance, which also includes an essentially pro-life message affirming Jack’s inherent worth, despite the criminal and tragic nature of his parentage, the picture is probably acceptable for at least some mature adolescents, the elements listed below notwithstanding.

The film contains brief abusive violence, mature themes including serial rape and suicide, an overheard but unseen sexual encounter, a couple of profane terms. The Catholic News Service classification is A-III adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R -- restricted. Under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

Catholic Schools Week tribute

POPE FRANCIS SAYS ..

"In your school, take part in various activities to be open to others – especially to the poorest and neediest - to work to improve the world in which we live."

On behalf of the Mission Office, I would like to take this opportunity to shed praise and accolades on our Catholic Schools in the Diocese of Ogdensburg, their staff, teachers, students and parents.

The Missionary Childhood Association (MCA) would cease to exist or be able to do “good things” were it not for the dedication, prayer and sacrifices made by our Catholic schools both locally and nationwide.

National Catholic Schools Week 2016 is to be held January 31 - February 6. The theme for the National Catholic Schools Week 2016 is “Catholic Schools: Communities of Faith, Knowledge and Service.” Schools typically observe the annual celebration week with Masses, open houses and other activities for students, teachers and principals, families, parishioners and community members. Through these events, schools focus on the value Catholic education provides to young people and its contributions to our church, our communities and our nation.

Catholic schools weeks provide a wonderful platform to go forth and follow the words of Pope Francis, “... take part in various activities to be open to others – especially to the poorest and neediest - to work to improve the world in which we live.” Our Catholic school children do so much good for their surrounding communities with service, prayer and support. Not a day goes by that these children are not putting others above themselves. Through nationally supported programs like the MCA, these students do good on a global level too. Each school year, the Diocese of Ogdensburg catholic school students raises thousands of dollars in support of the MCA program.

This year’s Catholic school week themes says it all: faith, knowledge and service. Those three words in essence sum up the basis of the MCA: awareness and sacrifice. Again, on behalf of the Mission Office, we salute our Catholic schools and the work they continue to pour into their effort to “… improve the world in which we live.”

God bless you and your families.

Please remember "The Society for the Propagation of the Faith" when writing or changing your Will.

As I climbed aboard the Northern Youth bus early Thursday morning, my hopes were high. I was excited for my oldest son and I to attend the 43rd annual International March for Life in Washington, D.C., something I’d wanted for years. The march occurs on January 22, the anniversary of Roe vs. Wade, a U.S. Supreme Court decision in 1973 which legalized abortion.

Sitting in the last seat at the back of the bus, I prayed the Rosary with the other travelers. As we rode, sunlight from the east slanted through the windows bathing us in a golden glow. I felt filled with purpose, filled with just cause, filled with motivation. I was anxious yet excited to belong to something so important to me, to march with hundreds of thousands of other peaceful warriors in the pro-life movement.

As we traveled most of the day, a huge storm approached our destination, a historic storm that would be amazing to see. But as we waiting to leave, slowly dawned. Perhaps it was coming earlier than expected, and the decision was made for us to miss the march and head back home.

I was stunned. It felt wrong to leave after traveling all that way and not accomplish our goal. I was upset. My heart hurt, and tears starting leaking. I felt like kicking something. Sitting in all my layers of clothing including my purple March for Life shirt, I stared out the window. I was angry, but had no target for my anger. I didn’t blame the decision makers, how could I? They were keeping us safe. I was angry at the situation. I prayed, “God, I know I live according to your will and not my own, but I don’t like this! I want to march. I don’t want to leave without marching!”

Somehow in the midst of my self-pity and inner temper tantrum, a thought slowly dawned. Perhaps…perhaps our life is a march where we carry the cause in our hearts and love in our souls. Our life is a march of hope. A march of living our lives through our faith, speaking out against injustice, praying and loving those who need healing, gently persuading others and carrying them to Christ with us. Protecting and speaking for those who can’t. That’s our march.

It’s not just a once-a-year event. Offering up our prayers, our disappointments, anxieties, sufferings and joys is another way we can march together as well.

Bus captain and chaplain Father Mark Reilly suggested to the Northern bus that we not only pray for all touched by abortion, but to offer any disappointments and sadness as a sacrifice to God. Our suffering can be united to Jesus’ suffering on the cross, and can be used for others we may not even know.

Catholic author Peter Kreeft explains it as, “if we are ‘in Christ’, we, like him, can offer up our sufferings to the Father - and he uses them. They become seeds, or rainwater, and something beautiful springs up that we seldom see in this life.”

And Bishop Fulton Sheen wrote, “Pain, agony, disappointments, injustices - all these can be poured into a heavenly treasury from which the anemic, sinful, confused, ignorant souls may draw unto the healing of their wings.”

So although I wouldn’t describe my disappointment as agony or an injustice, sitting there on the bus I held up my disappointment to Jesus, in the hopes that perhaps He would use my tiny drop, poured with thousands of other tiny drops into an ocean of mercy for those that need it.

It is a beautiful thing that our suffering and disappointments can be transformed and used in this manner. My trip without a march was not meaningless in helping the pro-life cause. Perhaps my tiny disappointment in some way helped another person heal from the pain of abortion. Perhaps it changed someone’s mind. Perhaps it simply comforted another. Perhaps it was added into that “heavenly treasury” and will be used in a manner of which I could never conceive.

I trust in God that we followed His purpose in His time. In faith, may we continue together in our march of life, our march of hope, our march of love.
