Memorial of God’s infinite mercy

VATICAN CITY (CNS) - God’s love is limitless and the church’s Holy Week services offer Christians a deeper understanding of his infinite mercy, Pope Francis said.

The Easter Triduum is a memorial to a love story "that gives us the certainty that we will never be abandoned in life’s trials,” he said at his weekly audience in St. Peter’s Square March 23.

Continuing a series of talks dedicated to God’s mercy, the pope reflected on each day of the Triduum leading to the celebration of Jesus’ resurrection.

In remembering the washing of the feet and the institution of the Eucharist on Holy Thursday, he said, Christians recall how Christ shows his disciples that the “Eucharist is love that is done through service” to others.

"In giving himself to us as food, Jesus attests that we must learn to break this nourishment with others so that it may become a true communion of life with those who are in need. He gives himself to us and asks us to remain in him in order to do the same," he said.

Good Friday, Pope Francis continued, is the "climactic moment” of the love of God who offers salvation to the whole world; a love that "embraces all and excludes no one.” The pope added that in remembering Christ’s passion and death, Christians "can and must love one another.”

‘Now and at the Hour of Our Death’

St. Bernard’s Parish in Saranac Lake hosted a conference on end-of-life issues March 19.

Kathleen Gallagher, director of pro-life activities for the New York State Catholic Conference, was the featured speaker.

The morning session focused on the physician assisted suicide legislation currently facing New York State.

Participants heard about the composition of the legislature and the importance of contacting representatives to make opposition known.

Faith-filled field trip

Bishop Terry R. LaValley is shown with students from Seton Catholic Central School in Plattsburgh who traveled to Ogdensburg for the March 17 Chrism Mass. In front are Nicole Bullock, Abigail Boule, Kathryn Larson and principal Catherine Russell; back, Cameron Lee, Avery Bell and Dawson Pellerin. Catholic schools across the diocese offer daily opportunities for students to learn about their faith and participate in liturgical experiences. Principals at the ten elementary schools and two high schools are now accepting registrations for the 2016-17 school year. See pages 4, 5 and 7.

Young Catholic voice: The energy of Easter and of little boys... p. 9
A celebration of ‘mercy in motion’

When Easter comes as early as it did this year, it’s easy to lose track of other important March dates on our church calendar.

Traditionally, for example, we celebrate the Feast of the Annunciation on March 25 but this year, of course, March 25 was Good Friday. That means we’ll be observing the angel Gabriel’s appearance to Mary – announcing that she had been chosen to be the mother of Jesus – on April 4, the first open day after Easter Sunday.

And, then there’s St. Joseph’s Day.

The celebration of the feast remained on March 19 but, this year, the vigil for Palm Sunday came as the sun was barely setting on the day and Holy Week claimed our complete attention.

But now, as we settle into the Easter Season, it’s not too late to consider the vital place of St. Joseph in our Catholic family.

As the patron of the only religious order based in our diocese, St. Joseph holds a special place in our particular part of the church family.

Bishop LaValley’s message for the Feast of St. Joseph (see page 3) is certainly timely as we look ahead to the Feast of Divine Mercy on Sunday.

In his homily at the Sisters of St. Joseph Motherhouse, the bishop said that “Joseph became an instrument through which Divine Mercy Himself would be welcomed, supported, and protected in this world.”

“We know that Joseph’s own deep faith in and worship of Yahweh must have had a powerful influence on Jesus’ growth,” Bishop LaValley said. “Leading Mary and the Christ Child on perilous journeys to and from Egypt to escape the dictates of those mired in evil, Joseph shows us what courage, tender concern and accompaniment can achieve.”

And, for our diocese, the Feast of St. Joseph offers a moment for us to acknowledge the “courage, tender concern and accompaniment” that we have experienced from our Sisters of St. Joseph.

Again, in the words of Bishop LaValley: “My friends, this Society of St. Joseph offers a radiant and attractive witness to those who live outside these walls every time you encourage and accompany your sisters who share the same charm and consecrated commitment. We admire and seek to imitate such mercy in motion!”

Mercy in motion. I think this is exactly what Pope Francis was encouraging all of us to embrace during this special Jubilee Year of Mercy.

The church of the North Country is, indeed, blessed by your presence.

Followers of Christ called to be merciful

This Sunday, as with the Sunday after Easter every year, is designated as Mercy Sunday. Holy Week – that week before Easter, the final week of Lent – is always a time to celebrate the Lord’s Resurrection. During Holy Week, we walked with Jesus though his Last Supper, we joined with Jesus in his Passion and Death and we find new life with Jesus in his Resurrection.

Each of these events demonstrate God’s great Mercy.

There are two things that I have learned over and over again each Holy Week. The first is compassion.

During his Passion Jesus demonstrated for us real compassion. As the soldiers were nailing Jesus to the cross, Jesus prayed, “Father forgive them.” Then, while hanging on the cross, one of the thieves berates Jesus; the other asks to be remembered. Jesus recognizes his sincerity. He says to him, “This day you will be with me in Paradise.”

A powerful moment. I pray that one day I will hear these words from the Lord – when my time comes.

As followers of Jesus all of us are challenged to become more merciful, more compassionate. What does this mean? How do we hope to make it possible? Being more compassionate means more than just being nice to a person – although that is spiritually a good thing. However, more than that being compassionate means living a total compassionate way of life. Christians should radiate compassion through their way we live our lives.

I realize this is not easy. We live in a world filled with times of violence and divisiveness. People will often respond to me that things happen, that reacting in anger or holding a grudge happens. Jesus demonstrates to us that even in tough situations – even in violent situations – compassion is possible.

I know only too well that many find being compassionate as an act of weakness. With Jesus I say there is strength in compassion. A compassionate person shows a strength and is unafraid to keep his or her self-control. Staying in control keeps us always prepared to make the right decision and to do the right thing.

We, Catholics, experience the compassion and mercy of Our God in the Sacrament of Penance. In faith, we know and believe that our God is merciful. We have confidence that God will forgive and guide us to peace.

We should not be afraid to meet the Lord in this sacrament. Yet, many do come to confession with fear, anxious because of their failings and sinfulness. They are embarrassed by their weakness. They are upset by their lack of faith. They know that Jesus has promised them yet, they hesitate. The Lord Jesus tells us not to be afraid; he teaches us that God is compassionate. This fear unfortunately often stays with us even as we get older. Too many of us still struggle with our faith in God’s compassion.

The other lesson that we should have learned is gratitude. Lent – Holy Week – Easter should have led us to Mercy Sunday with a deep, even intense gratitude. Our reaction to God’s compassion is obviously gratitude.

When all we do is a response to God’s great love with gratitude, we truly discover who we are and how we should live. This gratitude must also be a recognition to the many people who have been part of our lives, who have helped and watched over us.

This gratitude should also give us a recognition of the many events that the Lord has placed in our lives to lead and guide us. Our response must be gratitude. We must make gratitude a way of life. Such a way of life gives us a real meaning to what life is all about. You can’t say “thank you” enough. Such a way of life becomes special.

This gratitude always leads to compassion.
St. Joseph: a man of mercy

Bishop LaValley's homily for the St. Joseph's Day Mass at St. Joseph's Motherhouse in Watertown

While the story is so familiar, its impact continues to be ever new and truly earth-shattering.

In a dream, the Lord told Joseph that the Child conceived in Mary's womb "will save God's people from their sins." Simply - Divine Mercy would descend upon the human race - a Savior, Redeemer - and the world would never be the same!

Yet, even before it was made known to him what the Holy Spirit had in store for his betrothed, "Joseph, an upright man unwilling to expose her to the law, decided to divorce her quietly."

Here we see what lay deep within St. Joseph's heart: such tenderness, thoughtfulness and compassion for the woman he loved. Even before he received the divine message clarifying what was happening, Joseph wanted to avoid possible scandal, protecting Mary from potential harm.

Prior to him having all of the providential facts, he was making plans for a personal act of mercy.

This Jubilee of Mercy is a year of focused tenderness, reverence and compassion, a time to acknowledge God's boundless mercy for me, for you.

This is a graced time to size up the tenderness, reverence and compassion I give to my sisters and brothers, my neighbor.

I think it particularly opportune for this much-loved congregation of consecrated religious that honors and seeks the powerful intercession of St. Joseph, to acknowledge and celebrate God's love as you reflect on the tenderness, reverence and compassion that lay deep within your hearts as consecrated religious.

So, we each ask the question: Do these qualities that lay deep within the heart of St. Joseph lie deep within my own heart - tenderness, reverence and compassion for others.

In the Joy of the Gospel (99), Pope Francis writes: "I especially ask Christians in communities throughout the world to offer a radiant and attractive witness of fraternal communion. Let everyone admire how you care for one another, and how you encourage and accompany one another. In John's Gospel we hear Jesus say, "By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another" (Jn 13:35).

This was Jesus' heartfelt prayer to the Father: ‘That they may all be one... in us... so that the world may believe’ (Jn 17:21).

My friends, this Society of St. Joseph offers a radiant and attractive witness to those who live outside these walls every time you encourage and accompany your sisters who share the same charism and consecrated commitment. We admire and seek to imitate such mercy in motion! The kind attention and tender care you give to your sisters in failing health, the compassion you express in your parish ministry, in the schools, college, and the reverence you give to those in the special religious education programs all reveal your Spirit-filled heart and devoted faith in Jesus, the Face of Divine Mercy.

Mercy is about caring for and accompanying one another. The Holy Father reminds us to “Beware of the temptation of jealousy! We are all in the same boat and headed to the same port,” he says. So, we ask for the grace to rejoice in the gifts of each, which belong to all.

Like Joseph, even before we know all the details of what the Lord has mapped out for the future for us as individuals, even before we know all the details of what the Lord has in store for this consecrated community’s tomorrow - tenderness, compassion and kindness through it all are the best indicators of the extent to which God's mercy has found a home in our hearts. To encourage, care for, and to accompany another means that mercy cannot be shared from a distance or an abstract idea that we just talk about.

When the Holy Father urges us to encourage and accompany one another, we see such were facets of Joseph's life.

We know that Joseph’s own deep faith in and worship of Yahweh must have had a powerful influence on Jesus’ growth. Leading Mary and the Christ Child on perilous journeys to and from Egypt to escape the dictates of those mired in evil.

Joseph shows us what courage, tender concern and accompaniment can achieve.

Joseph became an instrument through which Divine Mercy Himself would be welcomed, supported, and protected in this world.

In Misericordiae Vultus, Pope Francis recalls that there are times when “we are called to gaze even more attentively on mercy so that we may become a more effective sign of the Father's action in our lives.”

With the welcoming of this Most Holy of Weeks only hours away, we have an opportunity to accompany the merciful Lord in a personal and communal prayer on his Passion Way.

At this and every Eucharist, we join our lives with that of our victorious and risen Savior in humble adoration of the Father. St. Paul told the Romans that “All depends on faith, everything is a grace. Because we believe, we enter the profound richness of this Mystery, rejoicing in the mercy so freely and lovingly given.

Thank you, Sisters of St. Joseph for your radiant witness of tender love and mercy. The Church of the North Country is so blessed! Blessed and Happy Feast Day to you and to all the Associates! May God be praised... forever may God be praised!
Looking Ahead

By Sister Ellen Rose Coughlin, SSJ
Superintendent of Schools

Sometimes it is a challenge to live in the present moment! Although graduation and the end of the school year are weeks away, the attention of our principals is drawn not only to the end of this school year but also to the more distant future, the beginning of the next school year!

This focus on the next school year is particularly apparent in March when principals have their own form of March Madness as they host kindergarten registrations, school visits for potential new students and parent information opportunities.

Yesterday, I received a new book in the mail, Dear Pope Francis: The Pope Answers Letters from Children around the World (Loyola Press). Children have questions and struggles just like adults. In Dear Pope Francis, our Holy Father gives children the chance to voice their concerns and ask the questions that rest deep in their hearts. Some of the questions are fun; some serious; many are deep with meaning.

Pope Francis answers each question with sensitivity and clarity, teaching the children about Christ and our Catholic faith.

Some of the questions children asked Pope Francis include:

I would like to know more about Jesus Christ.

What makes our schools unique is not a program, or an environment or competent administrators and faculty. What makes them unique is a person, Jesus Christ.

In our schools, the deepest questions about the human person, about life and death, sin and eternal life, the transformation of society, relationship with others, personal responsibility – many of which the children asked Pope Francis – are answered with a Catholic world view that is founded on the Gospel and the rich heritage of our faith.

If your children are not in a Catholic school and you live in an area where a Catholic school education is available I encourage you to contact the principal to arrange for a visit to the school. (See information in advertisement on page 5.)

Nothing can replace the personal experience provided by a school visit in which you can speak with the principal, tour the school and experience the atmosphere of the school community. A school visit, as well as talking to parents who send their children to a Catholic school, can be particularly helpful to parents who are preparing to send their first child to school.

If you currently have your children enrolled in one of our schools invite a neighbor or friend whose school aged children are not in a Catholic school to make a visit to the school with you. Imagine how the enrollment in a school would grow if every family currently enrolled convinced one other family that sending their children to the Catholic school would be a priceless investment in their child’s future.
Seton Principal to retire at end of school year

PLATTSBURGH — Catherine Russell, principal of the Middle and High School campus of The Seton Schools, has announced her retirement after more than 15 years of combined service to Catholic education in the Diocese of Ogdensburg.

During her tenure, Ms. Russell focused her contributions in enhancing technology, and expanding college course offerings, the visual and performing arts and the campus ministry programs. “With increasing enrollment and lots of great things happening, Seton Catholic is in a good place,” Russell said. “Personally, after six years, I am ready for a change, but it is most important to me that the focus for next year is to continue to enhance the strides that we have made.”

“I am so grateful to the faculty and staff here at Seton for our combined team effort as our successes could not have been made possible without their dedication,” she said.

Seton Catholic was recently recommended for reaccreditation by the validating team from the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. Russell said that Seton faculty pride themselves on their dedication to the mission of Catholic education and a personal passion of teaching and learning.

Meeting the academic bar of New York State’s new curriculum standards is not viewed by Seton faculty as an academic challenge as much as it is a personal commitment to success, she said.

A few highlights of positive alternatives to public school education:

• All New York State education standards are exceeded with small class sizes
• Faculty are accredited and certified with low student:teacher ratios
• Emphasis on differentiated and individualized instruction
• Faith-based environment teaches good morals and welcomes all denominations
• 100% college acceptance rate

Mr. Chris Hay, president of the Education Council of The Seton Schools said, “Ms. Russell’s passion and dedication to Catholic education will certainly be missed. Under her leadership we have increased the number of international students, been reaccredited with Middle States (the only local school to have this designation), successfully transitioned the sixth grade from Seton Academy to the middle/high school building and developed a 5-year strategic plan for our Seton Schools.”

“We wish Ms. Russell the best as she moves into the next phase of her life,” Hay said.

Augustinian Academy students bring home gold

CARThAGE - Augustinian Academy brought home two first place awards among 16 medals in the Adirondack Regional Division B Science Olympiad competition recently held at State University of New York at Potsdam. This is the second year in a row that the Saints have made an outstanding showing in the regional competition which features “rigorous, standards-based challenges.”

Events are spread across all STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math) disciplines. The competition offers opportunities to build devices that perform a specific action or series of actions, delve into a study of invasive species or fossils to become “experts” in recognizing samples and working like a scientist in that field, and experiment with variables to learn how they affect the speed of a windmill blade, the flight of a glider or the quality of ice cream.

The team achieved first place in both the “Reach for the Stars” and “Food Science” contests. They took second in “Invasive Species” and “Picture This” and won third place medals in “Elastic Launched Glider,” “Meteorology,” “Mission Possible” (creating a Rube Goldberg device) and “Wind Power.” Fourth place finishes in seven other events gave the students the broad base to make such a strong showing at regionals and give them the opportunity to go to the state tournament in April.

St. Bernard’s Parish hosts conference on end-of-life decision making

‘Now and at the Hour of Our Death’

By Colleen Miner
Staff writer

SARANAC LAKE – The 50 participants of the March 19 end-of-life conference at St. Bernard’s Church heard Kathleen Gallagher of the New York State Catholic Conference say “we must provide aid in living, not aid in dying.”

Gallagher, director of pro-life activities for the conference, was the keynote speaker at the program titled “Now and At the Hour of Our Death,” also the name of the New York State bishops’ guide to end-of-life decision making.

The priests of St. Bernard’s Father Patrick Ratigan, pastor, and Father Thomas Higman, parochial vicar, opened the program.

Father Higman pointed out that the word “compassion” in Latin, means “co-suffering” and noted the appropriateness of the conference being held on the Feast of St. Joseph, the Patron Saint of a Happy Death.

During the morning session, Gallagher spoke about “the flawed and dangerous physician assisted suicide legislation currently facing New York State.

The “Patient Self Determination Act” and the “End of Life Options Act” do not require psychiatric counseling for depression, lack safeguards, discriminate against people with disabilities and require that the death certificate list the cause of death as the illness, not suicide, she said. The patient-doctor relationship suffers because the legislation turns doctors into killers who do not uphold the Hippocratic Oath.

In order to provide “aid in living, not aid in dying,” Gallagher said, “we must work to remove obstacles to hospice utilization, in which New York ranks 49th in the nation and must increase education in pain management and promote palliative care.”

Participants heard about the composition of the legislature and the importance of contacting representatives to make opposition known.

An easy way to stay informed and contact legislators, Gallagher said, is through the Catholic Action Network which is accessed through the New York State Catholic Conference website www.nyscatholic.org.

Gallagher discussed the two life and death personal stories of Brittany Maynard and JJ Hanson who both suffered from the same aggressive brain cancer. Brittany moved to Oregon (one of five states with physician assisted suicide) to kill herself. In contrast, JJ heroically fought the cancer and is now in remission.

“New York State sends first responders if someone is suicidal and spends millions of dollars to prevent suicide, yet this legislation sends the message that some suicides are acceptable,” Gallagher said. “It sends the message that some lives are not worth living.”

The afternoon session addressed end-of-life decision making and the difference between allowing natural death to occur vs. hastening the moment of death. Ordinary and extraordinary treatments were discussed as well as the fact that each situation is different.

“We must make good, prudential judgements based on whether treatment is beneficial or burdensome, asking whether the treatment is proportionate to the benefits,” Gallagher said. “All circumstances must be taken into account.”

Nutrition and hydration are considered normal, ordinary care in most circumstances, explained Gallagher, noting particular exceptions, and urging participants to reference the U.S. Bishops’ “Ethical and Religious Directives for Catholic Healthcare” or the Catechism of the Catholic Church when in doubt.

When making decisions, she recommended that people pray, seek counsel from loved ones, and speak to medical professionals to gather information.

Gallagher said that the bishops of the state recommend Catholics complete a health care proxy to name someone to make medical decisions for them if there comes a time when they cannot.

“When choosing a proxy one should consider someone of good moral character who knows your value and beliefs who operates well under stress,” she said. “It’s important to plan ahead and have conversations with your proxy. Living Wills are legal, but not preferable, as they vest power in a piece of paper instead of a human person.”

MOLST, Medical Orders for Life Sustaining Treatment, tries to combine all forms. MOLST was designed for those who have one year or less to live but can be dangerous if not used properly, Gallagher said.

“Circumstances can change, advances occur in healthcare, changes in medical situations - this is why our bishops have urged great caution with regard to MOLST,” she said.

The day ended with a question and answer period, followed by a Holy Hour with Eucharistic Adoration.

(Editors note: Copies of “Now and At the Hour of Our Death,” are available from pastors, the Respect Life Office or the New York State Catholic Conference.)
The energy of Easter and little boys

By Andrew Lauria
Contributing writer

When I think of the word “Easter” the thought that follows is “new life.”

When I think of my four-and two-year-old nephews, the thought that follows is “chaos mitigation.”

It was in moving their miniature trampoline to a new, safer location that I realized the season of Easter is exemplified by my nephews’ current season of boyhood.

As a relatively new uncle, I’m realizing that there is a lot of energy and excitement contained within my brother’s two young sons. They are like cannonballs on feet. Adventure, wonder, and excitement seem to boil over inside of them, and I get the feeling that the world just isn’t big enough to contain such zeal. These are all good signs of life.

But left undirected, this energy can lead to truly bad habits like selfishness, fighting, and destructiveness to name a few. When left to their own devices, it truly is only a matter of time until someone gets hurt.

Directing the energy that comes out of my nephews sometimes feels like the impossible task of capturing an exploding firecracker. You just can’t throw a net over the flying pieces and force them into any particular shape.

Rather, through the rules established by their parents and other responsible adults, the rhythm of life created by the functions they perform every day such as attending school, eating, sleeping, playing, and doing chores, the energy and life of these young boys is channeled, formed, and molded in such a way that they slowly come to a better understanding of and conformation with reality.

In other words, they are growing up. We go through the same experience in the development of our adult spiritual lives.

Easter, Baptism, rebirth - this is the season of new life and hope in the Church. Just think about how many Sacraments are administered this time of year, especially the welcoming of new members to our faith through Baptism!

There is no more theologically energetic time in the rest of the liturgical calendar, and this is very exciting.

All of this new life and spiritual energy is directed and guided by doctrines and beliefs, rules and codes that help form us to be more Christ-like.

All of the theology that we learn, the spiritual books we read, the different works of mercy in which we participate, to name just a few facets of our faith, form and direct our lives to this end.

And what beautiful, full, abundant lives we have by learning and living fully the teachings and traditions that Christ gave us in his Church!

But sometimes in our adult lives we get burned out by stress at work, become more fearful because of traumatic experiences, and can become exhausted, losing our zeal for life.

It is in this Easter season that we receive new life, new energy to respond to Christ in an exciting way, to be in wonder like a child. This energy once again becomes our fuel, the sustenance we need to keep us moving on our journey to improve our relationship with Christ, to be continually formed in his image and likeness.

Easter joy reignites our life in His Church, which provides us direction and formation necessary to live this dynamic reality.

Easter is the time of year that we can spiritually recharge through an encounter with Christ in his resurrection. Let’s take advantage of this Easter zeal and allow it to motivate our relationship with Christ by forming us through our life in his Church.

And when the time comes when we are unsure of what way to go next, we just have to place ourselves at the foot of the cross and look at Christ.

And by allowing Him to be our focus, we will be growing toward Him and, like the little ones, we too will be growing up.
Women are generally more religious than men

By Dennis Sadowski
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) - Women, especially among Christians around the world, generally are more devout than men when standard measures of religious commitment are considered, a Pew Research Center study found.

Christian women are more likely to attend weekly religious services, be involved in daily prayer and consider religion important in their lives at higher rates than men, according to the study’s findings, released March 22.

However, among Muslims, religious practice by men was significantly higher than by women when using the same standards, researchers discovered.

The findings correspond to the cultural norm in most Islamic societies that Muslim men are expected to attend communal Friday midday prayer in the mosque. Women can fulfill the Friday prayer requirement individually, either inside or outside the mosque.

The findings were part of a comprehensive look at religious practices by gender among Christians, Muslims, Buddhists, Hindus, Jews and the religiously unaffiliated in 192 countries and territories.

Overall, 83.4 percent of women around the world identify with a faith group while 79.9 percent of men do so. The study utilized census data, surveys and population registers from recent years in analyzing religious practices.

The comprehensive study includes data on gender and religion not previously analyzed from Middle Eastern, Latin American and some Asian countries, said Conrad Hackett, a demographer with the Pew Research Center who was the primary researcher on "The Gender Gap in Religion Around the World."

In the United States, women of all religions are more likely than men to say they pray daily (64 percent to 47 percent); attend religious services at least once a week (40 percent to 32 percent); and consider religion "very important" in their lives (60 percent to 47 percent).

The study found that while the U.S. was more religious than some of the world’s most developed countries - specifically Canada, the United Kingdom, Germany, Australia and France - the gender gap between women and men in their religious commitment was larger than in those same countries.

Hackett noted that while the study did not address why the U.S. was more religious than other developed countries, he said some sociologists point to countries - Western European nations in particular - where material needs of the poor, unemployed and elderly are met by government and that people in countries whose needs are not fully met may to turn to prayer or worship more frequently.

The study cited the work of several sociologists who for decades have worked to explain gender differences in religious commitment. Theories include the "nature" factor, which attributes the differences to physical or physiological causes such as hormones, genetics or biological predisposition.

Other studies point to "nurture," in which factors such as socialization into traditional gender roles, lower rates of female workforce participation and national economic structures are seen as reasons for the higher religious commitment of women.

Worldwide, the study found a mixed attendance pattern at worship services among the 81 countries analyzed. In 30 countries, mostly with Christian majorities or large Christian populations, women attended weekly services at higher levels than men. In 28 countries, most with large Muslim majorities or large Muslim populations, men attended weekly services at a higher rate. In the remaining 23 countries, there was no significant difference in attendance.

The largest average gender gap existed among people who offer daily prayer. In 84 countries from which data were available, the average share of women who reported praying daily is 8 percentage points higher than the average share of men.

Substantially more women than men said they pray daily in 43 of the countries. Only in Israel, where about 22 percent of adults identified as Orthodox Jews, did a higher percentage of men than women report praying daily.

"This makes me think of so many people, so many emargined, so many migrants and refugees for whom many do not want to assume responsibility for their fate," the pope said in his homily.

Greece and other European countries have been overwhelmed by refugees, particularly from Syria, Iraq and Afghanistan. An agreement between Turkey and the European Union went into effect on Palm Sunday to prevent refugees from attempting dangerous sea crossings from Turkey and to stem the continuing flow of refugees arriving in Greece will be returned to Turkey. For each refugee returned, one who has not left Turkey should be resettled in the European Union.

Carrying a woven palm branch, known as a "palmurello," Pope Francis led the Palm Sunday Mass with more than 60,000 people gathered on a warm spring morning in St. Peter’s Square.

Young people from Poland and around the world assisted at the Mass, carrying long palm branches in the procession and proclaiming the Scripture readings.

With Krakow, Poland, set to host the international gathering of World Youth Day with Pope Francis in July, the day’s second reading was in Polish.
Pope Francis to refugees: Despite differences, all people are God's children

By Junno Ancho Esteves
Catholic News Service

ROME (CNS) - In a moving gesture of brotherhood and peace, Pope Francis washed the feet of several refugees, including Muslims, Hindus and Copts.

Gestures, like Jesus washing the feet of his disciples, “speak louder than words,” he said during the Holy Thursday Mass of the Lord’s Supper March 24.

Coming together, he added, is another gesture meant to show a desire to live in peace as brothers and sisters despite people’s different cultural and religious backgrounds.

Hundreds of refugees were outside hoping to catch a glimpse of the pope as he made his way into the courtyard of the center for asylum seekers at Castelnuovo di Porto, about 15 miles north of Rome.

Prior to his arrival, the pope sent some Easter presents for the center’s guests: 200 chocolate Easter eggs, a wooden chess board, and several autographed soccer balls and baseballs.

After getting out of a blue four-door vehicle, the pope was greeted by Archbishop Rino Fisichella, the main organizer of the Vatican’s Year of Mercy initiatives, as well as the directors of the refugee center.

He was also introduced to three residents who would serve as his interpreters: Ibrahim from Afghanistan, Boro from Mali and Segan from Eritrea.

One of the refugees handed the pope a marker, which the pontiff used to sign a banner depicting the flags of 26 nations, representing the countries of origin of the center’s guests.

In his brief, off-the-cuff homily, the pope said there were two distinct gestures in the day’s Gospel: Jesus serving and washing the feet of his disciples and Judas receiving money by Jesus’ enemies to betray him.

“This day as well, there are two gestures. All of us here, (coming) together – Muslims, Hindus, Catholics, Copts, Evangelicals – but (being) brothers, sons of the same God who want to live in peace,” he said.

However, recalling the recent terrorist attack in Brussels, the pope said there was a second gesture made by those who want war.

Like Judas, he said, behind those who committed the attacks there are “arms traffickers who want blood, not peace.”

“In this moment, when I do Jesus’ same gesture – to wash the feet of you all – all of us are making this gesture of brotherhood. And all of us can say: We are diverse, we are different, we have different religions and cultures, but we are brothers and we want to live in peace,” he said.

Acknowledging the suffering endured by the refugees, Pope Francis asked them to pray in “their own religious language” so that there may “always be brotherhood and goodness.”

After his homily, the pope removed his vestments and put on a large white garment tied over his alb.

He kneeled before each of the 12 people, washed each person’s foot slowly and dried it.

The refugees barely contained their emotions, tears streaming down their faces as the pope bent low and kissed their feet. A young mother wiped her tears as the pope gazed at her and reached out to touch her baby.

The evening Mass was the second of two Holy Thursday liturgies for Pope Francis; the first was a morning chrism Mass in St. Peter’s Basilica.

Before going around and greeting each of the center’s residents individually, Pope Francis asked them to remember the beauty of living together as brothers and sisters despite their different cultures, religions and traditions.

This beauty, he said, “has a name: peace and love.”
The world was never the same after the Resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. As a consequence, the readings for the Sundays following Easter, all the way to Pentecost, deal with earth-shattering events.

St. Luke wrote, not only his Gospel, but a second volume called the Acts of the Apostles that covers nearly seventy years of history. The first reading today is taken from that book. It describes a scene in the Temple ofpectacular healings. No, it’s not Jesus who is the central figure, but the power of the Spirit now present in Jesus’ apostles. They are continuing God’s mercy and compassion towards the sick and the crippled and the lame. Since Jesus had died on the cross, not just for some, but for all people, His followers show no discrimination in healing both rich and poor, Jews and strangers to Jerusalem.

Today’s second reading is from the great “dream book” of John, the Book of Revelation. We learn that it is God Himself through the Angel who told John to write down these great scenes of future judgment and the glory that will come to Jesus and to those who are faithful to the Lamb. John writes from his exile along with many other Christians, exiled by the Emperor Domitian, to the Isle of Patmos.

Today we think of countless Christians, driven from Moslem countries at a loss of possessions, employment, and homeland. Present day persecution for the faith amounts to genocide. Governments that could help are sadly so indifferent.

Why is this Sunday called Divine Mercy Sunday? Because Pope John Paul II saw in the visions of a Polish Sister, Saint Faustina Kowalska, a message Jesus Christ wished the world to focus on more - His Divine Mercy.

Jesus’ Mercy is powerfully shown in today’s Gospel as the newly-risen Savior appears to those who had betrayed Him, those who in weakness had run far away from the soldiers and from their Master in His three-hour agony and death.

As Jesus came through those locked doors where they had huddled in fear of arrest, He did not upbraid or condemn them, but said with loving compassion, “Peace be to You.”

He forgave them for their weakness, their cowardice, and their sinfulness. He comforted them, telling them of His doubts and fears.

Secondly, he did not fire them from their ministry, but commissioned them to preach His Name to the ends of the earth. He restored His trust in them, and loved them even more.

He would eventually send His Spirit to strengthen them with power.

As Jesus showed His Divine mercy to his apostles on this Sunday, the Church urges us today to show our gratitude and belief in His never-failing forgiveness for our sins and betrayals of His love.

He urges us to pray often for a world that has abandoned His commandments, ignored His words, and shunned His healing.

Worst of all, they have failed to believe in His incredible mercy. We need to make reparation for the indifference of our world by our daily prayer and public witness.

Pope Francis wrote a book recently on mercy. Its title is borrowed from Pope Benedict: “The Name of God is Mercy.”

Jesus yearns to shower the grace of His mercy on every creature on earth. His eyes still search us out from the Cross, begging us to not to ignore His sacrifice. God’s mercy alone can overcome the wars and divisions in this beautiful world that He created in love.

Christian genocide... it’s happening now!

By Tony Magliano
NCC columnist

For many of us who strive to seriously practice faith in Jesus Christ, and to extend that practice out into the marketplace, the political square and society at large, persecution rarely means more than being ridiculed, verbally harassed, and to a certain degree socially and politically marginalized.

But for so many other Christians throughout the world who courageously refuse to deny Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior – with all that means – persecution means torture, rape, enslavement and death.

In his well-researched book, “The Global War on Christians,” Catholic journalist John Allen, cites studies that indicate the number of Christians killed for the faith every year ranges from 7,300 to 100,000 worldwide. Even the lower figure of 7,300 people murdered every year because of their faith in Christ is shocking, and sadly alarming.

It is incumbent on those of us who are safe and sound to tirelessly pray, advocate for, and work on behalf of hurting and vulnerable Christians.

While followers of Jesus have a strict obligation to help all people in need to the best of our ability – regardless of their race, ethnicity, nationality or religion – we have a special responsibility to care for our suffering brothers and sisters in Christ.

For as St. Paul teaches, “So then, while we have the opportunity, let us do good to all, but especially to those who belong to the family of the faith” (Gal 6:10).

Allen writes, “Christians today indisputably are the most persecuted religious body on the planet, and too often their new martyrs suffer in silence.”

Holocaust survivor and Nobel Peace Prize laureate Elie Wiesel said, “We must take sides. ... Silence encourages the tormentor, never the tormented.”

So, what should we do to help end the genocide?

Pray!

Every day let’s remember in our personal and liturgical prayers those who suffer in any way – especially for their faith in Jesus.

For Jesus is a refugee family. Pope Francis has asked every parish in Europe to do just that. In the spirit of Francis, parishes throughout the world should likewise open their doors to our persecuted brothers and sisters.

It’s really not that hard. And many of us can increase our individual contributions to help. An excellent international Catholic organization dedicated to helping persecuted Christians worldwide is Aid to the Church in Need.

Bill O’Keefe, vice president for government relations and advocacy for Catholic Relief Services shared with me that it is also essential for every believer to email and call Capitol switchboard: 202-224-3121) their congressional delegation urging them to provide significant increased humanitarian funding and support for the immediate and long-term needs of refugees in Syria, and a comprehensive plan to rebuild Syria once the fighting ends.

According to U.S. State Department figures, since March of 2011 – when the Syrian conflict started – approximately 1,550 Syrians have been admitted through the U.S. refugee resettlement program. The U.S. can certainly do far better than this, especially since it has just recently declared that the Islamic State is committing genocide against Christians and other minorities (see: http://bit.ly/1R2It2A).

As I write, the solemnity of Good Friday is close at hand. And many of the followers of Christ and Jesus are being crucified with Him. Let us do everything we can to remove them from their crosses, and lighten the weight of our Lord’s cross who suffers with them.

BATMAN v SUPERMAN: DAWN OF JUSTICE

By Joseph McAleen
Catholic News Service

Darkness hovers over the neighboring cities of Gotham and Metropolis, the main settings of "Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice" (Warner Bros).

It's not just the looming clash of the DC Comics titans promised by the film's title. This follow-up to 2013's Superman reboot, "Man of Steel," directed again by Zack Snyder, is awash in cynicism and angst. Optimism and goofy fun take a back seat as our superheroes grapple with identity crises and personal dramas.

The movie is, nonetheless, at once thoroughly entertaining and thought provoking, even if its operatic scale comes at the cost of endless mayhem and an ear-splitting score. Snyder straps viewers into a roller-coaster ride that is often exhilarating and ultimately exhausting -- and much too intense for the younger set.

The plot picks up where "Man of Steel" left off. With Superman (Henry Cavill) continuing to battle his archenemy, Gen. Zod (Michael Shannon), over the skies of Metropolis, Bruce Wayne/Batman (Ben Affleck) watches in horror as buildings topple and thousands are killed, including employees of his own firm, Wayne Financial.

(Quiet moments of people praying to God - not Superman - for salvation, and blessing themselves, are a welcome sight in a contemporary Hollywood blockbuster.)

Batman comes to regard Superman not as a benign savior but as a conveyer of death and destruction. It's a discussion pursued by many as the world comes to grips with the mighty alien from the planet Krypton -- and wonders what his true intentions are.

Meanwhile, Superman's alter ego, Clark Kent, and his Daily Planet newspaper colleague Lois Lane (Amy Adams), have moved in together and are seen making love in the bathtub. Domestic bliss, at least of the shackled-up variety, seems at hand.

Not so fast, of course, for a dotty young megalomaniac, Lex Luthor (Jesse Eisenberg), is determined to bring down the Man of Steel who threatens his own desire for global domination. "Devils don't come from hell beneath us," Luthor warns. "They come from the sky."

He discovers Superman's Achilles heel, the mineral kryptonite. Luthor also hatches an elaborate plan to discredit Superman and prey upon Batman's growing resentment of his rival crime-fighter.

Before long, hearings are held in Washington by Sen. June Finch (Holly Hunter), holding Superman responsible for the deaths and other collateral damage inflicted by his actions.

So is Superman a champion or a false god? His stepmother, Martha (Diane Lane), offers straight talk: "Be their hero, Clark. Be their angel, be their monument, be anything they need you to be, or be none of it. You don't owe this world a thing. You never did."

As Superman embarks on some serious navel-gazing and Batman broods in his prison, Luthor instigates what he calls "the greatest gladiator match in the history of the world. God versus man. Day versus night! Son of Krypton versus Bat of Gotham!"

Snyder pulls out all the stops in a fight worthy of Pay-Per-View. Besides the main duo, a malevolent monster called Doomsday is thrown into the mix. So too is Wonder Woman (Gal Gadot). A 5,000-year-old Amazon princess (she doesn't look a day over 25), Wonder Woman has no love for Luthor, and joins the resistance to him.

Double W.'s appearance heralds the introduction of several other new super beings the script code names "metahumans." Their arrival sets the stage for a raft of future movies about a crime-fighting team, the "Justice League," that's clearly intended to rival Marvel's Avengers.

Prepare yourselves -- and don't forget the earplugs.

The film contains relentless and intense action violence, cohabitation, brief partial nudity as well as occasional profanity and crude language.

The Catholic News Service classification is A-III -- adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 -- parents strongly cautioned.

Why Mission?

From the Director’s Desk
Sister Mary Ellen Brett, SSJ
Diocesan Mission Director

First heard at Baptism, the call to share our faith is truly connected to every moment of every day. The Missionary Childhood Association (MCA) offers young Catholics and their families opportunities to make those daily connections

A calling through education

At Baptism, God places into the hearts of all a special missionary calling, asking a generous response. Children have received this calling, as has each religious educator / catechist. In a special way, religious educators / catechists have been called not only to be Disciples of Christ, but also to make disciples for Him.

The task of ministering to children is vital indeed.

Through their love, their witness, their prayers and sacrifices, young Catholics open new pathways to and His “Good News.” Young people are generous and enthusiastic, eager to use their talents to bring the Good News.

Recently I spent some time with the students in St. Bernard’s School in Saranac Lake and St. Agnes School in Lake Placid. The children warmly welcomed me into their schools and proudly showed me the things they are working on and learning about. The children have also been working very hard at raising awareness of the Missions and sending prayers and sacrifices their way. We spent the day learning about life in the developing world and how the children there are just like the children here. They just need our prayers. God Bless!
