Compassion: ‘call to service’

VATICAN CITY (CNS) - Jesus' compassion toward people in need is not a vague sentiment, but a calling for Christians to bring that same compassion to others, Pope Francis said.

By miraculously feeding thousands of people, Jesus made an act "of faith and prayer" that "shows the full strength of his will to be close to us and to save us," the pope said Aug. 17 at his weekly general audience.

In his audience talk, the pope reflected on the Gospel reading of the multiplication of the loaves and fishes. Jesus, he noted, "does not have a cold heart," but rather is moved by those who follow him and "feels bound to this crowd." However, the pope noted that Jesus is not only concerned with feeding the hungry crowd, but also invites his disciples to take part in feeding them.

"The Lord goes out to meet the needs of men and women and wants to make each one of us concretely share in his compassion," the pope said.

YOUNG AND FAITHFUL

DO YOU LOVE ME? Families benefit as they keep the Sabbath holy....p. 12
A treasure of young people

Even the most pessimistic of Catholics would be heartened to read the pages of this week’s issue of the NCC, devoted to the “young and faithful” of our diocese.

In a special section, beginning on page 5, we feature the voices of World Youth Day pilgrims, Gugenheim campers and a young man who made the brave decision to travel halfway across the country by himself to learn how to share his faith.

Mary Lou Kilian, director of New Evangelization, who coordinated the World Youth Day trip for the diocese, summed it up beautifully as she looked back on the week in Krakow:

“I was struck every evening by the depth of the spirituality and faith or our eight young people, by their openness to encounter Jesus and their trust in the group to share some of their most profound thoughts and feelings.

These young people are each unique, but they also are not unlike the other young people in our diocese who are hungry for Christ in their lives.

We have a treasure of young people in our diocese: ask them to share their faith with you and really listen to their thoughts and questions, and together with them, continue the journey of faith.

In the first two reports from the young people themselves, Carter Pierce of Heuvelton and Sam Bashaw of Keeseville – both just a month out of high school – show a depth of faith that would be remarkable for anybody.

I, for one, am very anxious to read what the rest have to say. And then we have Noah Arevalo of Crown Point who is still in high school. With help from his mother, Lorraine Turgeon, the former director of young adult ministry for the diocese, Noah discovered the “Transform Your World” evangelization camp.

Making his first solo plane trip to Atchison, Kansas, he spent a week “in a place that was filled with young people as much in love with the Catholic faith as I am.”

“We left camp with a sense of duty – we know Christ and we know what He expects of us and so we are to go out and live it out,” Noah wrote for the NCC. “It is in our living the faith in our actions that we will be able to transform the world!”

A treasure of young people?
Who could say no?!

Musings on family on a warm summer day

So, what to write about on this warm summer day?
Actually, my principal distraction these weeks of August has been the Olympic Games. I continue to enjoy watching the various events no matter what the sport is. I also enjoy the stories about the athletes, stories that are often filled with many surprises. I feel like I have come to know many of these young American athletes rather well.

As a matter of fact, I have come to know many from other countries, also. It is fun to watch them win a medal and I am disappointed when one of my favorites fails to win. It is so enjoyable watching all of these sports that I only watch every four years at Olympic time.

I often think about the athletes who do not win a medal. Have you ever thought about how they feel? Consider the many who have dedicated so much to train and work hard for a rather long time – and then be eliminated in the first heat.

I will admit that this dedication and preparation have been a good formation for them, making these women and men very outstanding people. It certainly helped them to move into excellent careers.

So, I suppose they might still be a bit disappointed not to win a medal.

One of the other things I appreciate is when the television people focus on the athlete’s family. I believe that much of the Olympic adventure is a family affair. From the athlete’s earliest years, there have been sacrifices by their parents and the constant support of their whole family.

These family stories are truly fascinating.
At the same time, I have learned that many parents, many families, simply will not accept the challenges.

I remember a friend of mine telling me such a story. His daughter – in eighth grade – was a talented gymnast. He wondered about Olympics so he investigated. He talked with coaches and parents of elite athletes.

After considering everything, he and his wife decided that the stress on their daughter would be too much. They also realized that their daughter would have to go into special programs. They thought that would be too much. This helped me realize something of the challenges that the Olympians do accept as they develop.

All of this makes me think for a while about the importance of family – in Olympics and in life. One of my joys in being a pastor has been the many, many wonderful families I have known and worked with over the years.

I am constantly impressed with families, with the love and the support that flows through them. I noticed early on that there is something special that come across quickly when you are with a close, loving, happy family.

At this moment, I think of so many beautiful families. There was the one I joined often for Sunday evening supper – a family of ten children. Each moment with them was a learning experience for me. And then there was the family of twelve children. I was always so pleased when an invitation came from them to join them for a celebration. Again, it was a fabulous experience for me.

I am certain you remember the constant emphasis that Pope Francis has made about family. He called his first special synod to consider family – what can and should the Catholic Church do for families.

Pope Francis then summarized the findings of the synod in his magnificent letter, “Amoris Laetitia”. It is a wonderful document that makes it clear that the Catholic Church will do all that is necessary to support and help families.

So, I ask you to join me in praying for all families – for happy families, for close families – but also for broken families, for unhappy families, for poor families – and we must pray always for the very idea of family.

May our Catholic Church always be united and alive as a family.

May each parish pray and act together as a family.
"The Church's job is to produce saints!" says Bishop Robert Barron. And he is certainly doing his part.

The former seminary professor and rector is the author of 15 books, a popular media personality and speaker, founder of Word on Fire ministries as well as author of their study programs, and currently Auxiliary Bishop of Los Angeles' Santa Barbara Pastoral Region.

On Sept. 25, Bishop Barron will keynote INSPIRE: Called to Love in Lake Placid. He spoke recently with the NCC about the message he will bring, the universal call to holiness, and the role of parishes in making people holy.

NCC: What will be the focus of your keynote address?
BISHOP BARRON: I have been looking at different possibilities, but I think I will structure the talk around our common Baptismal identity. In that first sacrament, every person is baptized priest, prophet, and king. There are different types of vocations within that baptismal identity. But all vocations, all forms of the Christian life, come together in exemplifying those three fundamental dimensions of our identity as baptized Christians.

NCC: How, for you, especially exemplifies this holiness to which all are called?
BISHOP BARRON: Thomas Aquinas, of course, my great patron saint, who opened my mind to the truths of God. His effect on me has been deep and lasting; it helped make me a priest, and a strong advocate of serious Catholic formation. When I was young, Thomas Merton was very important to me; his writings drew me into a life of prayer and contemplation.

Dorothy Day is a great hero of mine, as is Flannery O'Connor—a model of a holy mind and a holy spirit. And of course I am a big fan of G.K. Chesterton and John Henry Newman.

NCC: What distracts people from holiness?
BISHOP BARRON: Above all, prayer helps people toward holiness. Prayer is steady conversation with God. Human friendship cannot be cultivated apart from intimacy and conversation, and the same is true in our relationship with God. For Catholics, the Eucharist and other sacraments, as well as daily prayer, encourage holiness. So does fidelity to the mission, to doing what God tells you to do. This is important, even if what he asks is simple, or not what you wanted, or doesn’t fit into your career plans. I am a big fan of St. Therese of Lisieux, whose “little way” explains this perfectly:

Don’t fuss about doing great things, but do small things every day with great love. Prayer, fidelity to the mission, and doing everything with great love will deepen your holiness.

NCC: What are the roles of parishes in fostering growth in holiness?
BISHOP BARRON: The priest’s whole purpose is to make lay people holy, and the whole purpose of a parish is to be a center of holiness. So there are two things: are you fostering people in prayerful intimacy with Christ, and are you fostering their mission? At the heart, making people holy is the one thing that a priest has to do. A parish priest should draw his people to prayer, and to Mass and the sacraments—and then inculcate a sense of mission and of their purpose in the wider world. If a parish is not a center of holiness, it has lost its identity. We have a crisis in the laity: 75% of Catholics stay away from Sunday Mass, and marriage and birth rates are plummeting. Many have accepted the dis-values of the world. We haven’t begun to implement Vatican II’s call for the renewal of the laity - that intensification of love for God and for others that can transform the world.

NCC: What inspires people to want to be holy?
BISHOP BARRON: Saints! Saints inspire others to become saints, and it is the Church’s job to produce saints. The saint is someone who becomes luminous, who becomes compelling. Holiness is deeply attractive. That’s why saints have halos in pictures, to represent the light that comes from them. That light is real. I’ve known super-holy people in my life and they have that quality, that deep attractiveness. People who truly live the life of holiness naturally draw others in.
Rites held for Sr. Cecilia Carey, OP

OUR READERS WRITE

Excellent article

(An open letter to Stephen Tartaglia:)

I just wanted to say I loved your article in the Aug. 17 issue of the North Country Catholic. It was excellent!

It was one of the most well thought out interpretations /explanations of the 2nd Commandment that I have ever read! Including both the good and the bad really will give the reader(s) pause before taking the Lord’s name in vain usage ever again, as well as that of the individual who is made in His image and likeness.

Thank you and I hope you continue to contribute to the NCC newspaper.

Environmental Stewardship

What Time is it? (Part 1)

In the sports’ world it is time for the Olympic Summer Games. In the grand opening ceremony in Rio, the unfolding history of Brazil was beautifully portrayed beginning with the Indigenous people up to the present day.

Near the end of the program a sobering video was shown demonstrating the rising temperatures around the globe caused by global warming and climate change. These changes are resulting in the melting of glacier ice and the steady rise in sea level around the globe. The question “what time is it for the planet?” was brought to the world – front and center. It was a stark reminder to the countries of the world that our fate is interconnected.

Pope Francis pointed to “What time is it for Catholics?” in Laudato Si’ Care for our Common Home. In this Encyclical, rooted in Judo­Christian Scripture and Catholic social teachings, he exhorts us to look at what is happening to “our common home.”

After much consultation with world scientists, he pointed to the scientific evidence of climate change and its devastating effects on our brothers and sisters and on the community of the natural world.

Pope Francis calls all people to a World day of Prayer for the Care of our Home to be observed on Sept. 1. In the Season of Celebration that follows through until October 4, the Feast of St. Francis of Assisi, we are urged to learn more about the present environmental situation, to discover the root causes, and become familiar with the Catholic social teachings that are all embedded in Laudato Si’, and examine our own lifestyle that is often driven by consumerism and wastefulness.

Let us pray for guidance of the Holy Spirit to what action each of us can take this week in response to the “cries of the poor of the earth and of our sisters and brothers.”
By Carter Pierce
World Youth Day pilgrim

World Youth Day offers so many opportunities. A chance to travel abroad. A chance to see the Pope. A chance to meet new friends. But most importantly, it is an opportunity to meet God in a new, more powerful way.

So often in day to day life, we get lost in routine and lose our personal connection with God. In Krakow, Poland, we pilgrims were given the opportunity to let go of our other responsibilities and focus more time on Him.

We went to Mass daily, spent hours in adoration, and prayed together morning and night. We saw His beauty in the majestic churches we visited, in the music at Mass, and in the thousands of other young pilgrims we met.

That is not to say it was all sunshine and roses. Along with the times of pure elation came many moments of physical, emotional, and spiritual distress. It was through these, however, that God picked me up to new heights.

Praying at the Center of Saint John Paul II in front of Pope John Paul’s blood-stained cassock, I was struck with flashbacks of a tragedy in my own life. I was overcome with emotion, mourning the painful memory. In that moment, I felt God’s comfort and recalled His healing grace which had provided for a miraculous recovery in both the Pope’s life and in mine.

In those most vulnerable moments, God touched us and gave us insights into life. For me, I grew in my understanding, my love for my family, my love for God and my trust in Him. God’s graces come in unexpected ways.

Then again, on Saturday, I found myself in similar distress. We had just completed the long journey to the Final Mass site, Campus Misericordiae, where the week was to reach its climax.

As the millions of other pilgrims around me filled with joy and excitement, I found myself weighted down by what I had witnessed in the day. I regretted the actions I had seen and in which I had partaken; experiences that seemed to chip away at our Catholic brotherhood in Christ.

Slowly, through prayer, I picked myself up. Then, a complete stranger, Claudio, came to me and confessed that he saw my “heavy heart” and offered to “share weights.” It touched me deeply. His message was exactly what I needed to ensure myself of our universal connection.

Despite different nationalities and cultures, we are one in Christ, caring for each other. My spirits instantly shot upward. From the pits into which I had fallen came forth the greatest joy. God’s graces come in unexpected ways.

Certainly, the trip was filled with pure joy. However, it was often in the times of trouble that I most allowed God into my life to touch me. Ways in which I had never felt Him before. Ways in which I never would have expected.

I have come to discover that when I let Him into my life, He never fails to lift me up, allowing me to become better than before. In these moments, I grew in my relationship with God. I grew in understanding, I grew in faith, love, and charity.

World Youth Day is more than a time for sight-seeing and shopping. It is a time for growth. World Youth Day is not a vacation. It is a pilgrimage. And that is why it was the best experience of my life.

BISHOP’S FUND 2016... MERCY IN MOTION

Bishop’s Fund keeps Camp Guggenheim in good shape

By Jim Crowley
Chancellor

I grew up in the suburbs of Buffalo. Bills, Sabres, wings, but pop became soda. After 29 years, the North Country is home.

This Diocese contains spectacular natural wonders, incredibly special people and great places to live and raise a family. It also contains so many special, holy places. St. Stephen’s in Croghan, St. Mary’s Cathedral, St. Peter’s Church in Plattsburgh and Wadhams Hall begins a list of places that moved my heart over the years. All those places and times began with a prayerful space and finish with people open the Holy Spirit.

Nowhere have I experienced the Spirit more often than at Guggenheim.

Stand on the shore by the lodge and understand Elijah hearing the Lord in the silence. Campers on the beach sound like the children coming to Jesus. Every bend on a trail or corner in the dorm offers an encounter with holiness.

As Chancellor, I oversee the maintenance of the Guggenheim Center. What a responsibility! Protect a place of such beauty that so many call home. Keep the dorm and beach attractive so children and families want to experience the love and joy of Summer Camp and Family Camp. Care for a magnificent Great Camp can host retreats and gatherings for lay, religious and clergy, young and old. Make sure buildings are dry, water is clean, and the road is smooth.

Ralph Bennet remains the director doing daily maintenance and a hired contractor will replace roofs this fall. Those are not my talents. But the Bishop asks that I work wisely, on behalf of the people of the Diocese, with available resources to continue Sister Jennifer Votrab’s work and keep the Guggenheim Center a place we long to visit.

Six buildings, five outbuildings, water filtration and septic for eighty needs skilled laborers and elaborate equipment. My wife, Rita, and I chose to help by giving from our treasure to the Bishop’s Fund Appeal. The Appeal supports many wonderful programs including the Guggenheim Center.

As Chancellor, I ask you to consider contribute to the Bishop’s Fund as well. Maintaining and improving any facility in the environment of the Adirondacks will never be inconsequential.

Your gift enables us be good stewards to acres of prime Adirondack wilderness while providing a place for Summer Camp, Family Camp, meetings, reunions and retreats so priceless gifts of love and holiness can be given and received for years to come.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

Thirty-five children, 12 young adults and 14 adults praised God in a faith filled fun week this summer at the Greystone Building at Holy Family in Watertown. The children sang, danced, played games, saw puppet shows, made crafts and learned about the people in the Bible - Noah, Jonah, Jesus, Peter and Paul - with the Deep Sea Discovery theme.

BISHOP’S AWARD

YOUTH RALLY TO BE PART OF INSPIRE

LADY PLACID - The 2016 diocesan Youth Rally will be held in conjunction with INSPIRE: Called to Love, the diocesan summit, Sept. 25 at the Olympic Arena.

Young people, in grades six through 12, will attend the keynote address delivered by Bishop Robert Barron and then break off into activities designed for them. Additional activities being offered are:
• Performance by Full Armor Band
• Wrist rosary making
• Life-size foosball
• Prayer corner
• Teambuilding activities
• Scripture photo booth
• Carbon walk and tree planting

Pre-registration is required at www.inspirecalledtolove.org or through parishes.

Kelly Donnelly, diocesan youth ministry director, encouraged teenagers across the diocese to register. “Gather with hundreds of other teens in Lake Placid on Sept. 25 to make new friends, grow in faith and have fun,” she said.
Teen aims to ‘transform his world’

By Noah Arenal
Parishioner, Catholic Communities of Crown Point & Moriah

On July 10, I packed my bags and headed to the Benedictine College in Atchison, Kansas, for the Transform Your World Evangelization Camp.

Transform Your World is a week long camp to train young Catholics to share the Good News of Jesus Christ and the Catholic faith to the world. I joined 47 other teens from around the USA to deepen our love for and faith in Jesus, learn more about our faith and discuss life as a young Catholic. We also talked about how to inspire other teens to live that authentic love of God.

The camp is sponsored by Casting Nets Ministry, founded by Chris Stewart, Tony Brandt, and Hector Molina as a way to meet the challenges of the new evangelization.

In addition to Chris and Tony, we were able to meet and spend the week with amazing leaders in evangelization, like Matt Fradd, Jackie Francois Angel, Jim Beckman and Sarah Swafford. They taught us how to develop an authentic prayer life, to talk to our peers about religious truths and moral issues. They inspired us to live authentic, chaste lives and to be, for many, the only Gospel some may ever read.

The week was intense!! The days were long, but I learned and experienced so much I didn’t mind. Our days were spent in personal prayer, daily Mass, Liturgy of the Hours and Adoration, and inspirational talks by the speakers.

I found out about the camp through my Mom and a Facebook post, and went online to apply. You actually had to apply, submit references from people including your parish priest.

One of the greatest things about camp was that I was in a place that was filled with young people as much in love with the Catholic faith as I am; that is rare. I was anxious before I went since this was me first time on a plane on my own, and I didn’t know what to expect except that I wasn’t going to know anyone there.

I never dreamed the impact that this week has had on my life. My spiritual life has deepened and changed forever. How amazing it was to be in an environment that allowed us to be honest and real with one another.

As a young man, it was great to see men sharing their faith honestly and sharing how they overcame hardships in their own lives.

Now I have the friendship and support from all who experienced this week with me, and we text and chat, and most importantly we pray for one another – keeping us motivated to become better and better evangelists. I walked away knowing that prayer has to be the center of my life, and I try to get at least 30 minutes of prayer in per day now that I have returned home.

Chris reminded us that now that we had been so close to the light, the dark was going to seem even darker, but the memories of camp continue to shine.

We left camp with a sense of duty - we know Christ and we know what He expects of us and so we are to go out and live it out.

It is in our living the faith in our actions that we will be able to transform the world!

Noah, age 17, will be entering the 12th grade at Crown Point Central School.

SARANAC LAKE - "A place to help kids know God, build a personal relationship with Jesus and joyfully live out faith every day."

That’s that description of Camp Guggenheim offered by Kelly Donnelly of Plattsburgh who served as camp director for the 44th season of the diocesan summer program.

Founded in 1972, Camp Guggenheim continues to provide weeks of faith building and fun for young people ages 11 to 18.

The program features daily liturgies, arts and crafts, swimming, outdoor adventure programs and a variety of Guggenheim traditions.

Ms. Donnelly, who is also diocesan director of youth ministry, noted that the 2016 program includes special attention to the Year of Mercy.

“Our theme song ‘Made’ (by Hawk Nelson) focuses on how much God loves us, how each person is perfectly made,” she said. “We need to know we are loved by God in order to understand mercy for others.”

Two campers from Week Three joined their camp director in singing the praises of Guggenheim.

Gabriel Gratto, age 15, of St. Alexander’s Parish in Morisonville, comes to camp because “it’s a good way to make connections with Christ and it’s a lot of fun.”

“I really like the counselors and have made a lot of good friends,” he said.

Fourteen-year-old Violet Reyes of Massena, said, “the counselors really make us feel like we’re part of a family, so it’s home away from home.

“And, the view is beautiful,” said Violet about camp located on lower Saranac Lake in the Adirondacks.

“But the best part,” she said, “is making more friends.

Both Gabriel and Violet appreciated the liturgical experiences at the diocesan camp.

“The Masses are more kid-friendly and more energizing,” Violet said, “with good music.”

Gabriel added that “we sing a lot of the same songs as at home but change them up a bit.”

Ms. Donnelly credits the camp staff for the successful program.

“We have a strong community of young adults striving to live out their faith,” she said. “They are joy-filled, full of love... and fun.”

WYD pilgrims are launched into a culture that revolves around faith

‘Catholicism was contagious’

By Samantha Bashaw
World Youth Day pilgrim

Imagine a Catholic culture. Impossible to wrap your head around, right?
I thought so too, but then I made the rash decision of attending World Youth Day in Krakow, Poland, where God gave me a deserving smack of reality.

The week made me fall in love with being Catholic. I wanted to emulate so badly what I had experienced in Poland.

Unbeknownst to me, I was heading to the most Catholic country in the world where 95% of the population are practicing Catholics!

Two years ago when I signed up for World Youth Day, I had no idea the kind of commitment it would become as a person of faith.

By way of plane, tram, and miles of walking, I was launched into the culture of Poland, a culture that revolves around Catholicism.

Upon arriving to Krakow, our group of eleven pilgrims found our way to St. Mary's Basilica right in the heart of the city. The Basilica was our first taste of Poland, and it certainly did not fail us.

The bustle and rising excitement of the outside market, quickly dissipated as we crossed the threshold. It was like a calm had settled over all its inhabitants, leaving only room to focus on the purpose this grand building was designed for.

The vaulted ceilings bore a rich blue color that was dotted with golden stars as a reflection of the sky, and everywhere the eye went, you could see that that reflection was of God himself. God’s presence surrounded you, but the evidence wasn’t just in the largest crucifix I had ever seen or even in the ornate statues of Saints that seemed to be carved from the Creator directly, it was in a lesser blessing.

After praying by myself I decided to walk around and absorb as much as I could of my surroundings.

I began to focus on the people coming in and out of the Basilica. I first noticed a young Polish boy, probably around the age of four or five, walk in to the Church, and immediately genuflect and do the sign of the cross.

I was completely blown away by his sudden reverence that wasn’t a result of his grandmother nudging him, but rather of his own accord.

A couple moments later I found a Polish family of four. Mom and dad were led by two little girls who went by one of the chapels and knelt down to pray. They had their hands clasped together towards their face, eyes closed, with a small furrow between their eyebrows, making me think, “What could they be possibly praying about?” At their age I knew the Our Father and Hail Mary, the basics, but their prayer seemed much deeper than rattling off recited verses.

I let my eyes go elsewhere, not wanting to disturb their beautiful peace. When I had circled around, I saw that the family had risen from their kneeling position, and had begun walking into the depth of the Basilica. However, one of the little girls appeared cradled under her mother’s arm, weeping. Again, I was beyond stunned. There was no doubt that the Holy Spirit had impacted this young girl’s life, in a way that I couldn’t possibly try to imagine.

Those two moments had left me in awe of the Polish youth, and how their culture instilled the importance of God, as not something to be shameful of, but as a major part of who they are. Now, this was only a glimpse of day one.

We visited more churches that week than I can count, and prayed more than I ever had in my entire life.

Catholicism was contagious. Everywhere you went there would be crosses, pictures of the Virgin Mother, and numerous relics that gave the city an “other worldly” feel.

There was no other way to explain the pure graces we felt, than the simple fact that in Poland they live off a culture of Catholicism.

The ads we saw rarely showed the immoral behavior that seems to be everywhere in the United States. It was beyond beautiful and many of us wished that we could move to Poland.
A week of hospitality, music, love

By Marika Donders
World Youth Day coordinator

A couple of weeks ago, ten other pilgrims and I returned from World Youth Day which was a culmination of two years of planning, fundraising and coordinating. It was worth every minute of the preparations to make it all come together.

The question I get most often is what was the one highlight for you? It is really difficult to answer with one favorite event or encounter since it was a week packed with at least a month's worth of events and encounters.

Since this was my third World Youth Day, the highlights for me were not the big events with the pope, but rather they were incidentals to World Youth Day.

A saint-filled city

I think the first highlight was the city of Krakow itself. The city is imbued by the Saints and they followed us around everywhere we went. Saint John Paul II was ever present: on people's lips, in various locations and historical moments.

Our hotel was a block away from the Archbishop's residence where he had lived and where he had addressed his masses from the same window that Pope Francis used to address the young people who gathered under this window in the evenings.

We visited St. Florian which was Karol Wojtyla's first parish and the John Paul II Center which included the relic of his cassock from when he was shot in St. Peter's square.

We participated in Mass at Wawel Cathedral and saw the altar where Father Wojtyla celebrated his first Masses.

The day we visited Auschwitz and Birkenau, I kept encountering St. Maximilian Kolbe: his relic at the Catechesis site, a scrap of paper with his image on it, a discussion about his life between two strangers on the trolley. That day was also the feast day of Blessed Titus Brandsma, a Dutch Carmelite who died at Dachau.

We visited the Wieliczka Salt Mines which is filled with religious carvings made by miners and I met St. Kinga whom I never heard of before. She turned up again that evening as we prayed evening prayer at the St. John II Center. We into a 'random' available side chapel and it was not coincidentally dedicated to St. Kinga. And then there was St. Faustina, Blessed Pier Giorgio Frassati, Blessed Father Jerzy Polieluszko, ... and the list goes on.

The hospitality

The second thing that stood out for me was the hospitality everywhere we went. The streets of Krakow were taken over by a million and a half young Catholics from all over the world. It would be understandable if there were residents in Krakow who were annoyed by the inconvenience of closed roads and singing pilgrims everywhere waving flags and clogging restaurants, churches and parks. And yet, everyone smiled and wanted to know where we were from.

Little Polish grandparents with twinkling eyes who didn't speak English smiled, tried to tell us things in Polish and when we didn't understand would gently pat our hands or make some other gesture of welcome and shared joy.

The most amazing hospitality was at the Dominican Church which is locally known for its ministry to young adults. The church hosted the relic of the incorrupt body of Blessed Pierre Giorgio.

Like all the parishes in Krakow the doors were open 24/7. But in addition, the Dominicans had opened their Cloister and created a display of Dominican Saints and, knowing they were dealing with the internet generation, provided free WiFi.

In their back garden, there were bathrooms as well as a large tent with food and drink and places to sit and relax and listen to fellow pilgrims make music or talk with the brothers and volunteers.

I think I could easily have spent the entire week at the Dominican Church and the pilgrimage would have been worth the trip.

The music

The third thing that stood out for me was the music, especially the singing.

Pilgrim groups from all over the world would sing as they walked along. When we would walk into larger churches often there would be Masses being offered in side chapels and you would hear hymns or chants drifting through the Church.

We have a treasure of young people in our diocese: ask them to share their faith with you and really listen to their thoughts and questions, and together with them, continue the journey of faith.
The mercy-filled life: Mother Teresa embodied what Pope Francis teaches

By Cindy Wooden
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – If there is one person who immersed herself in the “peripheries” Pope Francis is drawn to, it was Blessed Teresa of Kolkata.

If there was one who showed courage and creativity in bringing God’s mercy to the world, like Pope Francis urges, it was the diminutive founder of the Missionaries of Charity.

For many people, the Catholic Church’s Year of Mercy will reach its culmination when Pope Francis canonizes Mother Teresa Sept. 4, recognizing the holiness of charity, mercy and courage found in a package just 5-feet tall.

Ken Hackett, U.S. ambassador to the Holy See, worked closely with Mother Teresa and the Missionaries of Charity in his previous positions at the U.S. bishops’ Catholic Relief Services. He was at her funeral in 1997, her beatification in 2003 and will attend the Mass where she will be declared a saint.

“Where Mother pushed the Missionaries of Charity was to the edge, to the most difficult places,” said the ambassador, who said he visited her houses “all the time, everywhere.”

“They were always out there, both geographically and with the people who absolutely fell through the cracks,” he said.

Mother Teresa opened homes in Ethiopia during the communist military dictatorship, in the most destitute neighborhoods of Haiti’s capital, in Rwanda after the genocide and in Yemen, where four Missionaries of Charity were murdered in March.

“When there was war, when there was fighting, there they were,” Hackett said.

“They stayed.”

Mother Teresa demonstrated that living a life committed to mercy took “selflessness and courage,” he said.

Her courage also was demonstrated in her ability to “speak truth to power,” he said.

Mother Teresa visited the United States regularly, speaking to Catholic groups, opening homes and meeting with presidents, including Ronald Reagan, George Bush and Bill Clinton. “She was straight out against abortion,” the ambassador said. “From conception to death – she was the whole thing and didn’t pull any punches.”

Like Pope Francis, he said, Mother Teresa drew energy from personal, one-on-one contact with people and consciously chose to live as simply as the poor she befriended and tended.

In life and after her death, Mother Teresa faced criticism for not using her fame and contacts to advocate more directly for social and political change to improve the lives of the poor she served.

“You can find all the things she wasn’t,” the ambassador said, “but what she was was much more important than what she wasn’t. She was a model and now she will be a saint.”

Valeria Martano, Asia coordinator for the Community of Sant’Egidio, said, “We are talking about a woman who broke out of the existing framework of what was expected of a Catholic woman in the 1940s. And, like Pope Francis, she chose to make her life a denunciation of injustice.

“Her witness was testimony that things can change,” Martano said. “She did not speak of justice so much as do justice.”

“Mother Teresa chose to understand the world through the eyes of the least of the least, what Pope Francis would call the peripheries,” said Martano, who also leads Sant’Egidio programs in the poorest neighborhoods on the southern edge of Rome. But it is not just about “going out,” Martano said. For both Pope Francis and Mother Teresa, she said, everything starts with prayer.

The founder of the Missionaries of Charity insisted that she and her sisters were “contemplatives in the midst of the world,” she said. “It was not just about doing.”

Mother Teresa’s prayer took her to the peripheries and the peripheries were key to her prayer.

“What Mother Teresa lived, Pope Francis teaches constantly: compassion in the face of pain and never accepting indifference in the face of suffering,” said Archbishop Matteo Zuppi of Bologna, Italy.

For the archbishop, Mother Teresa modeled “a church close to the poor, a church that is mother to the poor and that lives the joy of serving the poor.”

Revelations after her death that she suffered a “dark night of the soul,” decades of feeling abandoned by God, are for Archbishop Zuppi a further sign of her deep immersion in the lives of the poor and forgotten.

“Her spiritual director would say that thirst is knowing there is water and longing for it,” he said. “She was a woman who made the thirst of Christ on the cross her own. She lived that thirst.”
Learning the lessons of humility

The readings this Sunday are all about humility. We read in the wisdom book of Sirach, “My child, conduct your affairs with humility, and you will be loved more than a giver of gifts. Humble yourself the more, the greater you are, and you will find favor with God.” From the very beginning of Pope Francis’ reign, he has constantly impressed people around the world with his genuine and authentic humility, begging people to pray for him, refusing to live in the Apostolic Palace, falling on his knees to wash the feet of prisoners.

A second piece of advice in Sirach is for us to be good listeners. “...an attentive ear is the joy of the wise.” It is by listening with full attention when people speak to us that we ourselves can learn so much.

On the other hand, St. Thomas tells us that pride “breaks the chain of charity and unity.”

Jesus himself said, “Learn of me, for I am meek and humble of heart.” He urges us to be like children, “for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.”

In today’s Gospel from Luke, Jesus also gives advice about conducting ourselves with humility. He counsels his fellow-guests at the banquet not to push and shove their way into the best seats. Why?

Sabbath: spend time together, eat, talk, pray

Kids often say funny things when you’re teaching them about God. Some kids say “Our Father who art in Heaven, how did you know my name?” My daughter Sophia thought the third commandment was “to keep the Sabbath the whole day.” Ironically, she was right.

On the sixth day God created the animals and humans and on the seventh day God rested. We are distinguished from the other animals because we were made in the image and likeness of God.

Being created in the image of God means that humans were given the gift of reason and free will. Using these gifts to love as God does is what is meant by the likeness.

The Catechism says that “of all visible creatures, only man is able to know and love his creator.”

The constant struggle for human beings is to use their gifts of reason and free will to love. When they choose to sin rather than to love, they act more like animals than they do like God.

What does it mean to keep the Sabbath holy? Something is called holy when it is set aside for a sacred purpose. We are to put aside our normal work and shift to working to grow closer to God; from laboring like a beast of burden to worshipping God. In this type of work we find rest.

As Jesus says, “Come to me all who are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest...for my yoke is easy and my burden light.”

The word liturgy, which we use for our worship services, comes from the word leitourgia in Greek which means the work of/for the people.

Moses asks Pharaoh to let the Hebrews go out into the desert to worship God. Pharaoh refuses, saying that there is too much work to be done. Pharaoh wants to have dominion over the people as if they were animals.

Moses says that if the Hebrews are not allowed to worship God, they may be struck by a plague or by the sword.

If we fail to keep the Sabbath holy, there are consequences for us as well. The natural consequences of failing to get enough rest are many. Rest rejuvenates your body and your mind. Rest prevents injury and allows muscles to repair themselves. Rest effects our immune system, cognitive ability, memory, stress level and mood. Inadequate rest increases accidental death, weight gain, high blood pressure, and puts more stress on the heart. It effects every system of the body.

Some people say that they feel closer to God in nature, or alone at home, but this does not fulfill the commandment.

We are required to worship together as a community because we are created in God's image and the Trinity is a community of three persons.

When we attend Mass we experience God in the Liturgy of the Word, in the gathering of the people, in the priest who is an alter Christus, and in the Eucharist.

People who, for one reason or another, are not allowed to receive the Eucharist may experience God in other ways at Mass.

People who are divorced and remarried will frequently feel unwelcome at Mass and may not come. As a result, their children do not benefit from experiencing God and receiving the sacramental grace at Mass. It is very important to be sensitive to their situations and to make efforts to include them and help them feel welcome.

As parents, we are instrumental in helping our children form their identities, to know what it means to be beloved children in the family of God as well as members of our earthly family.

To strengthen these components of their identity, children need to spend time together with both families, and this is another reason why it is important to keep the Sabbath day holy.

Without a solid sense that they are children of God, they will easily fall victim to the multitude of false gods that society offers, and will not know who they are.

This was a recurring problem for the ancient Israelites and a struggle for families throughout history.

Families spend very little time together, perhaps 15 to 30 minutes per day. Increasing this is easy, but requires routines.

As a child I spent many Sunday afternoons at my grandparents’ house. Most of the time we had cousins, uncles and aunts there as well. We would spend time together, eat and talk. After Mass each Sunday we would get jelly donuts and a newspaper. The children would look at the comics while the adults read the rest of the newspaper. Some families play board games together.

Pam Stenzel recommends that when your children reach the dating age, have the person they are dating spend Sundays with your family, including going to Church.

In a nutshell, spend time together, eat, talk and pray!
The bad news for believers - whose hopes may have been raised by the participation of Burnett and Downey, fixtures in the world of Christian-oriented media projects - is that, primarily because of a poorly written script, this "Ben-Hur" fails to convince when Wallace's religious theme comes to the fore.

It arrives by way of what must still be a familiar plot to many, at least in its initial setup: First-century Jewish prince Judah Ben-Hur (Jack Huston) lives a prosperous life in Jerusalem, where he carries on a friendly rivalry with his Roman adopted brother, Messala (Toby Kebbell), and finds happiness through marriage to his true love, Esther (Nazanin Boniadi).

After Judah gives shelter to Dismas (Moises Arias), a young zealot who was wounded fighting against foreign rule, however, disaster strikes the House of Hur. So, too, does betrayal since Messala, now an influential army officer on the staff of Pontius Pilate (Pilou Asbaek), refuses to risk his career by helping the family that took him in as a child.

ConsIGNED to the miserable existence of a galley slave, and certain that the other members of his clan - including his mother, Naomi (Ayelet Zurer), and sister, Tirzah (Sofia Black-D'Elia), for whom Messala once carried a torch - have all been executed, Judah thirsts for revenge against his foster sibling. Until that is, multiple encounters with Jesus (Rodrigo Santoro) open his eyes to the value of forgiveness and reconciliation.

Although the role of Dismas, whose subversive activities substitute for those loose roof tiles that got Heston in trouble, is an innovation, the epic sea battle and that trademark chariot race remain. Aficionados of the 1959 version may find these lacking, but they're serviceable enough when weighed in isolation.

The real trouble arises when screenwriters Keith Clarke and John Ridley turn from mere diversion to something deeper. By skimping on the careful and time-consuming character development that would have been needed to make Judah's ultimate conversion believable, they doom the religious dimension of "Ben-Hur" as surely as Dismas does his protagonist and his household.

What viewers are left with is the cinematic equivalent of Lutheran theologian Dietrich Bonhoeffer's cheap grace, a redemption unjustified and unpersuasive precisely because it's unearned.

Though the causalities that litter the arena as the movie's most famous sequence progresses would normally suggest recommendation for mature viewers only, other elements are discreet enough that attendance by older teens would probably not be out of place.

The film contains generally stylized but harsh violence with several grisly deaths and some gore as well as a nongraphic marital bedroom scene. The Catholic News Service classification is A-II -- adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 -- parents strongly cautioned. Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

Gratitude for support of MPDO

By Sister Mary Ellen, SSJ
Diocesan Director

Thank you to all the parishioners in the deaneries of St. Lawrence, Jefferson and Lewis in the Diocese of Ogdensburg who so generously supported the annual Missionary Projects of the Diocese of Ogdensburg Collection on July 30th – 31st. I thank you especially from the people supported through this annual collection we assist at our former mission parish in Mollendo, Peru, the Bishop’s Latin America Appeal and other world projects deemed necessary by our Bishop.

2016’s theme for MPDO is “Give Local- Glean Global Good”. The late Father George F. Maroun, who founded the MPDO annual collection, carefully crafted it and its specific goals. Each year, a new poster is designed to help promote the collection in our parishes. This year’s poster was designed by assistant, Molly Ryan, in April 2016 and as usual, featured a local picture. The completed poster shipment arrived in the mission office the day following Fr. Maroun’s untimely death. He had no idea that he would be featured in the local picture in this year’s poster.

The selected photo that Molly chose - shown above - showcases our Bishop, Terry R. LaValley and me, presenting a check from the MPDO collection that was hand delivered just days later to Mollendo. Fr. Maroun was travelling to Mollendo, Peru to visit Padre Andres Marquez and his parish, St. Martin de Porres, to celebrate its 50th Anniversary. Many years ago, Fr. Maroun served as Pastor in St. Martin de Porres Parish and continued to his close ties to its people even after he his return to the United States. He visited often with groups from the Diocese to celebrate, worship and see the progress there first hand.

This is only one of the many gifts that has wiped away many tears of people globally who say “Ogdensburg has been so good to us”. Thank you again to the people of the Diocese of Ogdensburg for their generosity towards the MPDO collection as we remember Fr. Maroun. God Bless!
