How to have hope

VATICAN CITY (CNS) - Young people should love, believe and follow their dreams, never despairing because Jesus is always with them, Pope Francis said. When life hits hard, they should try to get up again, letting others help them, and if they are bored, they should concentrate on doing good things for others, the pope said Sept. 20 at his weekly audience.

Continuing his series of audience talks on Christian hope, the pope gave extensive advice on how to teach people, especially young people, to remain full of hope. No matter “where God has planted you, hope. Always hope,” he said, explaining: Enemy No. 1 is not out there somewhere, but inside oneself. “Don’t make room for bitter or dark thoughts.”

We can’t look the other way

It’s not surprising to see the word “apocalyptic” in the reports from Mexico, Puerto Rico, the Caribbean, Florida and not-to-be-forgotten Texas. Every day, it seems, a new disaster strikes our country or near neighbors with devastating consequence.

Hurricanes, floods and earthquakes have shattered the lives of millions. Every story you read is more heartbreaking than the last: nursing home residents dying for the lack of air conditioning, islands stripped of homes, trees, businesses and power, children trapped in a collapsed school building. It’s so hard to keep watching and even harder to know what to do.

As usual, we can find direction and wisdom from Pope Francis who preached about compassion during one of his morning Masses last week. “Don’t look away,” he said. “Be moved by tragedy and help.” People need to have true compassion so they feel others’ pain and are moved to help, Pope Francis said. Compassion is not the same as ‘ pity’ or (saying), ‘What a shame, poor people...’ but leaving things as they are, he said. The word “compassion” comes from “compati,” which means to “suffer with,” he said, and this is compassion’s true meaning.

God had compassion for his people, went to them through his son, Jesus, and restored their dignity as children of God, “recreating us all,” the pope said.

We can’t look the other way when we read or hear news about tragedies, such as starving children, child soldiers or enslaved women.

“Do I turn the page” and move on to tales of romance, “the soap opera that is on next?” he asked. Or “am I able to have compassion? To pray?” so that when one hears about these tragedies, one’s whole being is moved and “the heart suffers with these people.”

Most parishes of the Diocese of Ogdensburg have taken up a collection for victims of all the recent natural disasters. It’s not too late to give – or give again – to the parish or directly to Catholic Charities (6866 State Highway 37, Ogdensburg, NY 13669). If we claim to follow Christ, we can’t look away.

FATHER MUECH SAYS

Forgive us... as we forgive others

Today, I want to share with you some of my thoughts as I prepared my homily for last Sunday – that was the 24th Sunday in Ordinary Time. I hope you remember that in that Sunday’s Gospel reading, Jesus was challenging the apostles, actually all of us, his disciples, to be recognized as a forgiving people.

Do you remember Jesus’ parable in that Gospel reading? Jesus carefully tells a story as his teaching on forgiveness. A servant owes the king a “huge” amount and the servant begs the king for compassion. The king surprisingly forgives him the entire amount that he owes. That same servant refuses to forgive a fellow servant who owed him a “much smaller amount.”

The other servants turn him in and he is punished severely. Remember this is a parable – it didn’t really happen but is Jesus’ story for us; it reflects Jesus’ teaching.

We are called by Our Savior to be a forgiving, loving people. Jesus came among us, lived with us, taught us, suffered and died for us leading to his Resurrection all to convince us that God loves us so much he forgives our sins. I have hurt others – I know that I am a sinner. However, Jesus forgives me and challenges me to renew my readiness to live a good Christian life, to bring Jesus to all I meet.

My reprobate friends – and I have many – are not Church goers. They don’t feel worthy; they believe their life is too sinful. So, I usually remind them of God’s great forgiving love for all sinners.

In fact, we Church goers are forgiven sinners. I try to convince my friends that the largest gathering of sinners in town is at the parish Church each Sunday.

This challenge to be a forgiving person is not an easy task. Many hurts in life are so nasty, just too powerful for us to ever forgive, it seems. I remember talking with someone who told me she had not talked to a sister in 20 years – quite a grudge. I wanted to say – I didn’t but I wanted to say – that this grudge made her a narrow, cold hearted, unloving, unlived person.

So, how do we become a forgiving person? It begins with faith, our faith in our loving God and our response in love for this God’s love. We want to be like Jesus. We want to be a good people. Being ready to forgive does not mean we condone those hurts or grudges. Rather we want to make ourselves good people. We want to make our world a better place for Jesus has made us good people through his forgiveness.

Often, forgiveness takes time and prayer. There are times that we are hurt badly, maybe by being ignored or forgotten or a time someone truly hurts us. We can recognize how hurts happen – we see them often on movies or TV shows. I know I wonder how anyone could ever forgive what happened in the show. Could I forgive if it happened to me?

However, you and I have learned of the forgiveness given by a person – like a mother who is ready to forgive after her son is murdered. I wonder “how could they do it, how could they forgive?” I know the answer: they are good people who know Jesus and want to be like Jesus.

I remind you of the words we, priests, say during the consecration of the wine at every Mass – “In a similar way, when supper was ended, he took the chalice and, once more giving thanks, he gave it to his disciples, saying: ‘Take this all of you, and drink from it, for this is the Chalice of my Blood, the Blood of the new and eternal covenant, which will be poured out for you and for many for the forgiveness of sins. Do this in Memory of me.’"
In celebration of married love

Bishop LaValley’s homily for the diocesan Marriage Jubilee
Sept. 24 at St. Mary’s Cathedral

Two young brothers were having lunch. Suddenly, a huge squabble broke out with the two youngsters shouting at each other: “That’s no fair. You have more cake than me!” “That's because I cleaned my room better than you did!” “That doesn’t matter! Mommy! David got more cake than me.” They almost got into a fist-fight.

Mom intervened very quickly, taking dessert away from both of them and sending them to their rooms, hearing in the background, “That’s not fair!”

We spend a lot of time concerning ourselves with what we believe to be fair in life. Think about it: What is fair in married life? Is it fair that moms, more often than not, are the ones who end up cleaning the bathrooms, doing the laundry and the dishes?

Is it fair that some couples and families seem to get all the breaks, can afford to go on nice vacations and you work hard just to make ends meet?

You, faith-filled married couples, know how disastrous such an expectation of fairness can be for a marriage. In one’s quest to have at least as much cake as our brother or sister, we can end up very disillusioned and even bitter when we don’t realize that sharing isn’t precisely a 50/50 proposition in a marriage and family life.

This is often seen when dealing with a will. If one family member gets the slightest amount more than another does, it will be a fight to the finish, sometimes for a whole lifetime. Instead of counting our own blessings, we expend all sorts of energy in counting our neighbors’.

St. Matthew’s community was not much different. They, too, were faced with concerns of what was fair. Unfortunately, they, like us, tended to see things from a personal point of view rather than God’s. They, and we, measure most things from the perspective of “How will I be affected?”

The scribes and Pharisees had been concerned that Jesus ate and associated with sinners. Matthew’s community still had the same concern. Many of the leaders of the community were bringing Gentiles into their midst. Matthew’s Christian community didn’t think much of this. The Gentiles were outsiders. Those within the community had been there from the beginning, so surely they were better and deserved more. They felt, as did the laborers who spent the entire day in the vineyard of our Gospel story: they deserved more than the latecomers did.

Matthew had to set them straight.

Today we are challenged to examine our notions of justice and mercy. We are familiar with the parable of the lost sheep that tells us that there will be more rejoicing over the one found sheep than over the 99 who stayed faithful. We don’t particularly care for that notion. I mean, surely, we 99 faithful people will be rewarded better than the one we betrayed.

God is generous. But we must learn to let God be generous in His own way. We try too hard to create God in our image rather than the other way around. That can spell disaster for a marriage. The mystery of God’s grace is just that, a mystery. In grade school, we might have thought of grace as something that is quantifiable. The better we were, the more we got.

Even today we speak of building up graces. But grace is much more than some measurable stuff that is given to us. Grace is about our relationship with God. Simply being with God should be enough for any of us—but we still think in terms of getting more than someone else gets.

Your witness of faith and married love inspire us all to expand our hearts as you continue to do with the graces you received on your wedding day.

We cannot earn grace. It is a gift. It is given for reasons other than putting a lot of hours in the fields. If we do as God asks, He will treat us fairly, giving us what He has always promised: life with Him in the Kingdom.

But God is also merciful. All His children are equally precious to Him, and He wants nothing more than to have all of us with Him, even if we don’t want others with us in His company.

Our challenge is to let God be merciful and generous. Our challenge is to let God be God. There’s room for everyone in God’s gentle embrace.

Someday we will need to learn that we all have to get along and not be so concerned if someone else seems to get more than we do. Some day we will have to learn to be as generous in accepting others as our God is with us.

Until then, some kids will begrudge the extra that their parents do for their sisters or brothers who need the extra care and assistance, for whatever reason.

Until then we will moan and groan about what others have and neglect thanking God for what He has given us.

You, whose marriages we celebrate today, know all about generous hearts. That’s the only way that married love grows and loving families are formed. We thank you for such blessed witness of this beautiful sacrament.

After having children, Adam and Eve started getting a lot of questions from their kids about why they no longer lived in the Garden of Eden. Adam had a simple answer for this: “Your mother ate us out of house and home.” In this case, it wasn’t a cake.

Thank you for celebrating your milestones of wedded love as a family of faith here at your cathedral. Your witness of faith and married love inspire us all to expand our hearts as you continue to do with the graces you received on your wedding day.

Congratulations and God Bless you!

Annual Blue Mass to be held Sunday

WATERTOWN - Plans have been finalized for the second annual diocesan Blue Mass to be held Sunday at 2:30 p.m. at St. Patrick’s Church.

Bishop Terry R. LaValley will celebrate the Mass during which law enforcement personnel from across the diocese will be recognized.

The Blue Mass presents an opportunity for all Catholics of the North Country to support those serving in law enforcement and their families with prayers for their safety and well-being.

Law enforcement includes state troopers, police officers, correctional officers, sheriff employees, border patrol and customs agents, all those in federal law enforcement and district attorneys.

Those who attend the Mass are invited to wear their department uniforms. With 15 state and federal prisons, an international border and police agencies in eight North Country counties, a large percentage of people in the Diocese of Ogdensburg is active in law enforcement.

Michael Hamilton on the path to the priesthood

By Cathy Russell
Diocesan Vocation Coordinator

Third in a series

Our seminarian this week was born and raised in the north country, graduating from Saranac Central School. Michael Hamilton is the son of Thomas and Michelle Hamilton of Morrisonville and younger brother to Matthew. Tom is the Faith Formation Director at their parish, the Roman Catholic Communities of St. Alexander, St. Joseph and St. James.

During his high school years, Michael was active in music, drama and was the longtime manager of the varsity basketball team. It was during this time that Michael became more active in his parish community, eventually becoming master server, lector, sacristan and cantor.

It was at a diocesan youth rally that Michael found a vocations book that listed many religious congregations.

From sending out numerous inquiries to religious communities, Michael found the Mercedarian Friars in Philadelphia. One of their saints, Raymond Nonnatus, inspired Michael so much he took that name for Confirmation. This led to his entrance into the community after graduation from high school.

However, after a year with the Mercedarians, Michael discerned that he was not called to the religious life but to diocesan priesthood.

After taking a gap year to work and receive the counsel of several priests, Michael is happily settled as a first year college seminarian at the Pontifical College Josephinum.

“I want to be a priest to be with the people at their most sorrowful and most happy times and to bring them the love of Jesus,” he said.

There were many people who influenced Michael’s decision to enter the seminary.

First, Jesus with that still small voice in my heart,” he said. “But there were many faithful lay people and several priests and religious along the way.”

Michael’s favorite scripture quote is from Psalm 34: “Delight in the Lord always and he will give you the aspirations of your heart.”

This passage seems an excellent one for Michael to pray as his first year in seminary progresses.

And as for any advice he might have for a man thinking about seminary? “Take that step forward and don’t look back,” he said. “Leave all the worries in God’s hands.”

We are ‘One Bread, One Body and One Family’

By Stephen Tartaglia
Diocesan director, family life ministry

Consider some of the things Scripture says about marriage:

Adam’s reaction to Eve: “At last! This one is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh!” The man leaves his mother and his father and is joined to his wife and they become one flesh.

Ephesians says that husbands ought to love their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself. No one ever hated his own body. Instead, he nourishes and cherishes it, nourishes and cherishes it, fixing it. The Family Life team is committed to helping families grow healthier, stronger and holier. Our mission is to build a culture of marriage and family.

We believe that God’s plan for marriage and family life is not only beautiful, it is the most effective. God’s plan brings the greatest success and happiness to those who cooperate with it. We believe that humans find happiness in loving the way that God loves.

Families, unfortunately, face many challenges because society presents an ideology that is extremely opposed to God’s plan for marriage and family life. Society’s view is that marriage is based on a love that is merely a feeling. Society’s view is self-centered, narcissistic and materialistic. Society promotes consumption of the other as an object to be used, not gift of self. If there is ever an institution that the enemy would like to destroy, it would be the family. He is a liar and a murderer, and his attacks on families are true to form.

We place a great emphasis on education and healing in Family Ministry. We want families to know the truth that the Catholic Church teaches and why it is so important. We want to help them in following what the Church teaches about marriage and family life.

We offer Pre Cana Retreats and Natural Family Planning classes. We teach in the Formation for Ministry Program, the Virtus Program, and Catechetical workshops and events throughout the diocese.

We believe that parents are their children’s first and best teachers and that the values and life lessons that children receive in their family will be the most enduring and deeply impacting influences on their lives.

We understand that vocational formation (preparation for Matrimony or Religious Life) is something that begins at birth and continues throughout the diocese.

2017 Bishop’s Fund Appeal supports ministry to family life in Diocese of Ogdensburg

When a man and woman choose the Sacrament of Matrimony, they become “One Body in Christ.” It is not merely two people in a utilitarian contract with each other for their own pleasure. Rather it is an indestructible covenant that includes one man, one woman, and God. It is a freely-given, 3-person, complete gift of themselves to each other which forms one bond, out of which springs new life.

Imagine receiving the most precious and beautiful gift from someone that loves you more than anyone else. Think about how careful you would be with that gift. You would treat it with reverence. You would read the instructions on how to care for it and use it properly. You would protect it from other people that would misuse it or treat it carelessly. If it got dirty or damaged you would go to great expense to clean and fix it.

The Family Life team is committed to helping families grow healthier, stronger and holier. Our mission is to build a culture of marriage and family. We believe that God’s plan for marriage and family life is not only beautiful, it is the most effective. God’s plan brings the greatest success and happiness to those who cooperate with it. continues through adulthood.
We assist parents in the faith formation of their children in the “Remote Stages of Vocational Preparation” through Parenting for Purity workshops, and Family Guggenheim, a weekend retreat for the entire family.

Many families are hurting. Those families struggling to be faithful to God can often feel alone.

Families who have experienced abortion, separation or divorce are particularly vulnerable and need support more than ever.

In our ministry, we try to meet families where they are at and give them the support that they need to help them experience God’s love and healing.

We offer Rachel’s Vineyard Retreats for those suffering after an abortion. We are reaching out to families experiencing separation or divorce to help them feel welcome and offer healing and support.

The Family Life team consists of Steve Tartaglia - Director of Family Life, John and Colleen Miner - Respect Life, Suzanne and Angelo Pietropaoli – Natural Family Planning, and Dayna Leader – Marriage Preparation and Enrichment.

All of our ministries are supported through the Bishop’s Fund. We are extremely grateful for the generous donations which enable us to continue these necessary ministries.

God’s plan is to feed us with Himself, join us together to be One Body, and through our union, grow the family in love.

Be a part of God’s plan.

Environmental Stewardship

We are All Connected
As we approach the feast of our great ecologist, St. Francis of Assisi, I have been pondering and trying to understand what that connectedness means. A few years ago, many of us signed a “St. Francis Pledge.” This called us to pray; to learn all we could about the causes of climate change; to understand how each of us contributes to that change; to find ways to change our behavior; our way of acting and to be active in our communities to encourage change.

St. Francis saw God’s creative hand in all of creation, from the smallest creature to humans, made in God’s image. Because of this, he leads us to grow in love and respect for all life. So what does this mean in my life? I know God made us in His own image and that according to Genesis 2:15 we are called to cultivate and care for all the rest of what was created. It was for our use but also for our care... a pretty tall order and a privileged task!

As long as we keep use and care in balance, using only what was needed to feed, clothe and house us and used our growing knowledge to take care and nourish the plants, animals and resources so that those lives were also enriched, all went well. Then “original sin” popped up and we began to see that enough was not enough and found many ways to live richer lives.

Let the Prayer of St. Francis be our prayer this week. “Make me an instrument of your peace, where there is hatred let me bring your love. Let us ask God to help us be attuned to “cries of the earth and of the poor” and to find one way to bring His loving care to alleviate their pain. (To be continued next week.)

Croghan faith formation program - named in honor of St. Francis - celebrates 40th anniversary

What’s in a name?

By Thomas Schneeberger
St. Stephen’s Church, Croghan

Croghan - As I began to reflect on the question, “what’s in a name?” three thoughts or images came to mind. A name gives a sense of purpose. A name gives a sense of identity. A name can give us something or someone to aspire to... standing on the shoulders of those gone before us.

The St. Francis Faith Formation Center of St. Stephen’s Church, found its standing on the shoulders of that visionary group later, we stand on the shoulders of that visionary group... "empowering faith to become living, conscious, and active."

St. Francis, pray for us!

St. Francis Award

Once a year since the beginnings of the center, an award has been presented to an individual in the program who has exhibited extra-ordinary efforts on the behalf of children, youth, and families. The St. Francis Award keeps ever before us the patron saint as someone to aspire to.

Trosset Church Supply reopens retail operations

UTICA — The Trosset Church Supply and the Utica Catholic Book Store, one of the oldest suppliers of church goods in the country has opened in a new location, a year after closing its Genesee Street store.

Trosset Church Supply is reopening the book store in the Paul Building at 209 Elizabeth St., across from the Oneida County Court House. The Utica Catholic Book Store was first started by Alfred Trosset in 1899. The business eventually was expanded to include the Trosset Church Supply entity.

Former owner Richard Trosset, who died in 2015, made regular visits to the Diocese of Ogdensburg, selling church goods at diocesan conferences and serving parish needs throughout the North Country.

The hours of operation are from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Mondays through Fridays.

Appointments for Saturday pick-ups and store visits may also be made. Further information is available by calling 315-724-5191.

Murdered Oklahoma priest was beatified on Saturday

'They killed a man but created a saint'

By Maria Wiering
Catholic News Service

ST. PAUL, MINN. (CNS) - Retired Archbishop Harry J. Flynn was rector of Mount St. Mary’s Seminary in Emmitsburg, Maryland, when he got a call in 1979 from an old friend from the seminary, asking if he could visit for a week.

That friend was Father Stanley Rother, a priest of the Archdiocese of Oklahoma City and a missionary in a rural part of Guatemala.

He picked up Father Rother from Dulles International Airport near Washington and was appalled by the horrific situation the priest described in Guatemala. Members of his congregation had disappeared and were presumed dead, victims of a civil war between the government and guerrilla groups.

"If they asked for a few more cents for picking coffee beans, they were considered communists, and a truck would come into the village that night, stop at the home of the man or woman who asked for a few more cents, take them out to the country, torture them, kill them, and then throw their bodies into a well to poison that well," said Archbishop Flynn, who headed the Archdiocese of St. Paul and Minneapolis from 1995 to 2008.

In December 2016, Pope Francis recognized Father Stanley Rother as a martyr, making him the first U.S.-born martyr recognized by the Catholic Church. Also attending will be members of the Rother family, including distant cousins from Minnesota.

Father Rother grew up on a farm near Okarche, Oklahoma. He was a farm boy with a knack for fixing things. After high school, he left home for seminary in Texas, but he was asked to leave after struggling with Latin. Undeterred, he transferred to the Emmitsburg seminary, where he met Archbishop Flynn, who was three classes ahead of him. Archbishop Flynn noted his friend's deep prayer life.

"We could be downstairs in recreation, laughing and carrying on, and then the bell would ring to go up to chapel for night prayer, and Stanley seemed to me to go right into prayer, which I found enviable," Archbishop Flynn recalled in a recent interview with The Catholic Spirit, newspaper of the Minnesota Catholic Conference.

The two were in the seminary around the time that Pope John XXIII encouraged U.S. bishops to form partnerships between their dioceses and those in Latin America. The then-Diocese of Oklahoma City-Tulsa paired with the Diocese of Solola, Guatemala.

In 1968, Father Rother was asked to minister there in Santiago Atitlan, a mission established by Franciscans. The Mayan people there had been without a priest for nearly a century.

People who knew Father Rother weren't surprised that he returned again and again to Guatemala after the violence began, even with many opportunities to stay in the U.S. The Christmas before he died, he famously wrote to his archbishop, "A shepherd cannot run at the first sign of danger."

On July 28, 1981, three men burst into the parish rectory, demanding Father Rother. He was hiding, but when the men threatened the life of one of his protectors, he emerged. He was ultimately gunned down in his rectory, his knuckles raw from the fight, his spattered blood staining the wall.

The Guatemalans left the stains, and to this day, visitors - many of them pilgrims - can see the aftermath of what the gunmen did to their priest. The fatal bullet remains lodged in the wall.

"I'll always remember sitting in the room where he was martyred, and sitting there and looking at his blood all over the wall, splattered, and experiencing anger in my heart with the people who did that to him - this gentle, gentle shepherd," he said, "and then realizing what he would have said - something that Christ said, 'They don't even know what they're doing,' and they probably didn't. ... They killed a man, but they created a saint."
Pope Francis launches ‘Share the Journey’ campaign Sept. 27

Listening to the stories of migrants

By Cindy Wooden
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – No matter the position one takes on national migration policy, Pope Francis, Caritas Internationalis and national Catholic charities across the globe want Catholics to meet a migrant or refugee and listen to his or her story.

Pope Francis will launch the “Share the Journey” campaign Sept. 27. This is a two-year program of Caritas Internationalis to promote encounters between people on the move and people living in the countries they are leaving, passing through or arriving in.

Meeting migrants and refugees and listening to their stories - and having them listen to the stories of people in their host communities - mean the walls people have erected in their minds and hearts should begin to fall, said Michel Roy, secretary general of Caritas Internationalis.

“You may be afraid of migrants as a large group of people coming in, but when you meet a migrant, then you have a different vision,” he said July 27.

Listening to their stories makes it clear that “they are human beings, they have suffered much; they’ve left a situation where they could not live anymore because of violence, conflict or just because of misery,” Roy said.

“Once you understand the story of the person, then you will have a different attitude,” he said.

Most people who vote for political parties espousing anti-immigrant sentiments, Roy believes, “have never met a migrant,” which makes it easy for politicians to convince them that they have something to fear.

Even if the person does not change their mind about the most appropriate political policies for regulating migration, he said, it is necessary to make the fear subside by helping folks get to know the real people who have left all behind because of persecution, violence or extreme poverty.

Cardinal Luis Antonio Tagle of Manila, Philippines, president of Caritas Internationalis, wrote a letter in late June asking members of the Caritas federation to participate in the campaign. He said, “One of the most important questions we can ask ourselves as individuals, communities and countries at this time of mass movements of people and global doubt is ‘Do I allow fear to prevail in my heart, or do I allow hope to reign?’

“Through ‘Share the Journey’ we hope to dispel fear and understand why so many people are leaving their homes at this time in history,” the cardinal wrote. “We also want to inspire communities to build relationships with refugees and migrants. We want to shine a light and lead the way. Migration is a very old story but our campaign aims to help communities see it with new eyes and an open heart.”

The “Share the Journey” campaign will run at least until 2019. The U.S. bishops' Catholic Relief Services and Catholic Charities USA, as well as more than 160 other Caritas members around the world, will be sponsoring national and local events to provide opportunities for migrants and members of host communities to meet and share their stories.

Through his words and, especially, his gestures, Pope Francis “is inviting everyone on earth to be welcoming” and to protect migrants and help them integrate into the society of their new countries, Roy said. As a central institution of the church, he added, Caritas Internationalis promotes what Pope Francis is asking all Catholics to do.

“Catholics are not all convinced that we have to welcome migrants,” the secretary general acknowledged, “so I think we have to work to do within the church itself.”

But, he said, the pope is asking “everyone to make a step,” and Caritas hopes that will begin with every Catholic being willing to meet a migrant or refugee.

Bishops: Amend repeal bill to protect poor, keep ban on coverage of abortion

By Julie Asher
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) - The latest version of a Republican measure in the Senate to repeal the Affordable Care Act must be amended to protect poor and vulnerable Americans, said the chairman of four U.S. bishops' committees.

"As you consider the Graham-Cassidy legislation as a possible replacement for the Affordable Care Act, we urge you to think of the harm that will be caused to poor and vulnerable people and amend the legislation while retaining its positive features," the bishops said in a letter to all senators released Sept. 22.

Republican Sens. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina and Bill Cassidy of Louisiana have co-sponsored the legislation.

"Without significant improvement, this bill does not meet the moral criteria for health care reform outlined in our previous letters and must be changed," they said. That criteria includes respect for life and dignity; honoring conscience rights; access for all; and a high-quality plan that is affordable and comprehensive.

The bishops criticized the measure's Medicaid "per capita cap" because it puts an "insufferable burden" on poor and vulnerable Americans. They praised the bill for correcting "a serious flaw" in the ACA by ensuring "no federal funds are used for abortion or go to plans that cover it." They called on senators to amend the bill to address it flaws but retain the pro-life provisions.

The Graham-Cassidy bill would repeal the ACA and replace it with block grants for the states to spend as they see fit. The block grants' size, though, would shrink over time and disappear altogether in 2027. The Senate is working under a Sept. 30 deadline to pass the bill.

The letter was signed by Cardinal Timothy M. Dolan of New York, chairman of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops' Committee on Pro-Life Activities; Archbishop William E. Lori of Baltimore, chairman of the Committee for Religious Liberty; Bishop Frank J. Dewane of Venice, Florida, chairman of the Committee on Domestic Justice and Human Development; and Bishop Joe S. Vasquez of Austin, Texas, chairman of the Committee on Migration.

The USCCB also launched an action alert -- http://bit.ly/2xvbHag -- urging Catholics to contact their senators to urge them "to protect health care for poor and vulnerable people.

"The Graham-Cassidy bill includes a Medicaid 'per capita cap' that was part of previous bills, which have been rejected," the bishops wrote. "The Medicaid caps will fundamentally restructure this vital program, which supports the medical needs of those most in need. Over time, these modifications will result in deep funding cuts and lost coverage for millions of people.

"The Senate should only proceed with a full report concerning just how many people will be impacted," they said. "Our nation must not attempt to address its fiscal concerns by placing an insufferable health care burden on the backs of the poor.

The bishops said the proposal does "correct a serious flaw" in the ACA by making sure "no federal funds are used for abortion or go to plans that cover it." "This improvement is praiseworthy, and it is essential that any improved final bill retain these key provisions which would finally address grave moral problems in our current health care system," they said. "We also applaud that Graham-Cassidy redirects funds from organizations that provide abortion."

But they took the bill to task for giving block grants to states "in place of premium tax credits, cost-sharing subsidies and the Medicaid expansion," saying that arrangement will only harm the poor.

"While flexibility can be good, these block grants will result in billions of dollars in reductions for those in health care poverty," they said. "States already face significant deficits each budget cycle, and these block grants mean dollars intended for low income individuals and families will suddenly face competition from many other state priorities."

The country "can ill afford to put access to health care for those most in need in jeopardy this way" because, the bishops continued, "the costs to our communities, including public and private organizations at all levels, will be too high."

"Decisions about the health of our citizens - a concern fundamental to each of us should not be made in haste simply because an artificial deadline looms," they said. "The far-reaching implications of Congress' actions are too significant for that kind of governance," the committee chairman said.

They told senators that "the common good should call you to come together in a bi-partisan way to pass thoughtful legislation that addresses the life, conscience, immigrant access, market stability and affordability problems that now exist."
The proper time to change our minds

I'm sure you've heard the old saying, “A wise man changes his mind sometimes; a fool, never.”

In this Sunday's readings, God is giving us advice on when to change our minds, and when not to.

If we're pretty well secure in habits of virtue, then it's not a good idea to give in to the persuasions of friends who call us "old-fashioned" or foolish for following the teachings of our parents and childhood religion classes—and act contrary to our principles.

To change because of fear of losing face or being the butt of ridicule could risk God's displeasure, loss of grace, and even loss of eternal happiness.

As the old wisdom warns, why risk losing heaven for a few hours of the wrong kind of pleasure.

There's another kind of change discussed in the readings. And that's the kind of change that may be defined as conversion—from sinful ways to virtuous ones.

The prophet Ezekiel (first reading) tried to persuade his fellow-exiles in Babylon that, as long as they persisted in their sinful rejection of God's commandments, God would continue their exile. When they refused to change, God allowed the destruction of the Temple as well as the whole city of Jerusalem.

Eventually, they stopped blaming God for their crimes, repented of their stubbornness, and again followed the commandments.

That's the kind of change that also won the approval of Jesus in today's Gospel.

The first son in the parable stubbornly said "no" to his father's request. He was ready to risk the father's displeasure and even punishment. Then, (wisely), he began to feel guilty. He decided it wouldn't kill him to cut short a good time with his friends to work for his father. Let's hope that it was really love that made him change his mind. But even if it was just shame, and maybe a little fear of the consequences of his refusal, he did change his mind.

If his friends were real friends, they more than likely respected him for his decision.

How different was the behavior of the second son who said "yes" to his father, but then never followed through. He just wanted to look good, and to avoid the disappointment and perhaps anger in his father's eyes. He was quite possibly a hypocrite, who had no intention at all of helping in the vineyard.

Jesus compared that young man to the Pharisees and Scribes who had refused to accept the preaching of John the Baptist. By contrast, the prostitutes and tax collectors did listen to both John and to Jesus.

How do we know when to change our minds and when not to? The second reading gives us sound advice: "Do nothing out of selfishness...rather, have that mind in you which is in Christ Jesus who humbled himself even to the point of death."

To change one's mind is often humbling, especially if we risk the ridicule of worldly friends or even worldly family members. But isn't it far better to heed the truth than to stubbornly keep to the road that will eventually send us over a cliff?

Liturgic document unlikely to bring quick changes

By Cindy Wooden
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY/CNS - The shouts of joy and cries of despair that greeted Pope Francis' recent changes to canon law regarding liturgical texts appear to be exaggerated.

The changes can be read as part of Pope Francis' efforts to promote a "healthy decentralization" of church structures, said Indian Cardinal Oswald Gracias of Mumbai. "It makes clear the responsibility of the (bishops') conferences" in preparing faithful translations.

"But this is, more or less, the procedure we have been following."

"Just a few words have been changed" in canon law, so "we will have to see how it goes in the concrete," said the cardinal, who is a member of the international Council of Cardinals advising the pope on church governance and is a former member of Vox Clara, the committee that advises the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments on liturgical translations in English.

The document, "Magnum Principium" ("The Great Principle"), was released by the Vatican Sept. 9. It changes two clauses in canon 838 of the Code of Canon Law: from "reviewing" translations, the Holy See now is asked to "recognize adaptations approved by the episcopal conference"; and bishops' conferences, rather than being called "to prepare and publish" translations, are now called to prepare them "faithfully" and then to approve and publish them "after the confirmation of the Apostolic See."

In a note published with the text, Archbishop Arthur Roche, secretary of the worship congregation, said under the new rules, the Vatican's "confirmatio" of a translation is "ordinarily granted based on trust and confidence" and "supposes a positive evaluation of the faithfulness and congruence of the texts produced with respect to the typical Latin text."

Reactions varied widely. Steve Skojec, publisher and director of the blog OnePeterFive.com, called it "a ticking time bomb" and said, "When it comes to the liturgy of the universal church, episcopal conferences are quite simply out of their depth."

Father Michael G. Ryan, the pastor of the cathedral in Seattle, who had led a campaign to delay implementation of the current English translation, asked in America magazine, "Will our bishops respond to this invitation and take a hard look at the woefully inadequate translation we are currently using? We can only hope and pray that their pastoral concern and commitment to liturgical celebrations that are both beautiful and intelligible will prompt them to walk through the door that Pope Francis has opened."

The new document "gives a little endorsement now to (bishops') conferences and, in that sense, it's certainly in the direction of what the Holy Father wants: that conferences take more responsibility and healthy decentralization," Cardinal Gracias told Catholic News Service Sept. 19.

"The word 'fidelity' added to (canon law) is from 'Liturgy Authenticam,'" he said, referring to the 2001 instruction on translations, which was issued by the worship congregation. The pope's changes to canon law confirm its teaching, although "minor modifications are possible now."

"I have a feeling this will open the door" to small national or regional changes, for example in the English text in Africa versus India or North America, the cardinal said. "My personal opinion is that it is very convenient to have one translation for the whole world, but if there are such serious difficulties, I don't think we should force them" to accept a unified translation. He, like Msgr. Graulich, cited the example of bishops in Africa who said that having the people respond to the
AMERICAN ASSASSIN

By Joseph McAleer

The award for the most obvious film title of the year goes to "American Assassin" (CBS Films), an action thriller about - you guessed it - a professional killer from the United States, specifically Rhode Island.

This adaptation of the 2010 novel by Vince Flynn opens with a bang (multiple bangs, actually) and proceeds at a breakneck pace, leaving in its wake a veritable tsunami of bullets, blood and bodies.

It's a gory revenge fantasy reminiscent of the 'Death Wish' films, requiring a strong stomach and extreme patience. But the movie does finally come to its senses, and good triumphs over evil.

The story opens on a happy note before spiraling downhill.

Mitch Rapp (Dylan O'Brien) has just proposed to his girlfriend, Katrina (Charlotte Vega), on a crowded beach in Ibiza. As he strolls off to get celebratory cocktails, gunmen burst onto the sand and open fire, killing just about everyone in sight, including Katrina.

Flash forward two years, and Mitch has transformed himself into a lean, mean, fighting machine, a baby-faced version of Jason Bourne. He is driven by one desire: to avenge Katrina's death by killing the terrorists responsible. This means learning Arabic, studying the Quran and joining shady chat rooms on the internet.

Unbeknownst to Mitch, the CIA is watching his every move, and deputy director Irene Kennedy (Sanaa Lathan) is impressed.

And so Mitch is recruited for a new black-ops program to infiltrate Iranian terrorists seeking to unleash nuclear war in the Middle East.

First he must be trained, and that responsibility falls to Stan Hurley (Michael Keaton), a grizzled Cold War veteran. To his credit, Stan tries to temper Mitch's rage, and the hothead's belief that "we kill people who need to be killed."

"We need a higher cause," Stan counters, discouraging Mitch's vigilanism. "As soon as it starts feeling good, that's when you stop being a professional."

As the Iranian plot unfolds, Batman and Robin - make that Stan and Mitch - join forces with Annika (Shiva Negar), a comely Turkish agent who has her own scores to settle.

Director Michael Cuesta, channeling a Robert Ludlum thriller, keeps the audience guessing and the body count rising as the trio zips across Europe in search of a mysterious ringleader named Ghost (Taylor Kitsch), who just happens to be an old buddy of Stan's.

The film contains a vigilante theme, constant bloody violence, including torture and gunplay, female frontal nudity and much crude language.

The Catholic News Service classification is L — limited adult audience, films whose problematic content many adults would find troubling. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is R — restricted.

"And with your spirit" creates difficulties in societies still influenced by animism or belief in witchcraft.

"The door is slightly ajar now for some variety," Cardinal Gracias said.

The idea, though, that any English-speaking bishop would propose starting the English translation over again is "absolutely ridiculous," he said. The current Missal is "a great improvement" over what existed before, and "nobody has an appetite for big changes now."

From a canon law point of view, the document "does not really strengthen episcopal conferences, but it tries to put on a better base the collaboration between the Holy See and the bishops' conferences, because there have been some problems in the last few years," Msgr. Graulich said. "It's a question whether the Holy See can really evaluate, as bishops' conferences can do, what is a proper translation."

But, inserting the Latin word "fideliter" into canon law means the translation has to be done in accordance with "Liturgiam Authenticam," he said. "You are not free to make a translation that 'more or less' reports the text, but you have to do a translation that is as true as possible to the Latin original."

At the same time, Msgr. Graulich said, the new law encourages collaboration between bishops and the Vatican in judging what constitutes a faithful translation into a specific language.

The German translation that has been stalled since 2013 was "a very literal translation," he said. "If I as a celebrant don't understand what I read the first time, how will people in the pews understand it if they only hear it?"

"You have structures of language in Latin - and Italian and Spanish - that we don't have in German," he said, referring to grammar and, especially, verb tenses.

The obligation, which Pope Francis formally added to canon law, that translations be "faithful" to the Latin is the responsibility of the bishops' conference doing the translation, he said, "but then, as the Holy See has to confirm that, it is a second check. It's more check and balance" than shifting power," Msgr. Graulich said.

Fr. Patrick Mundy: ‘meek and just’

By Sister Mary Ellen Brett, SSJ, Diocesan Mission Director

As I was driving from Copenhagen to Ogdensburg preparing to write this column reflecting upon memories of Fr. Mundy, the Beatitude, “Blessed are the meek for they will inherit the land” came to my mind.

I’ve heard many stories from Sr. Gabriel Marie, SSJ’s great gratitude to Fr. Mundy for his care of the children at St. Patrick’s Children’s Home in Watertown, while he was assigned to Catholic Charities and parishes in the area.

Every Sunday afternoon and other times, he would ring the front door bell offering to play games, hike or join in the fun of whatever event was taking place, a truly humble man open to being of service where needed.

Sr. Gabriel said “Oh, how happy those kids were to see him, of course with a pocket full of candy.”

When I arrived in the mission office sitting on my desk the pages of the magazine only to find a picture of St. Martin de Porres was well known for his extreme humility, piety, charity and miraculous healings as he cared for Lima’s poorest of the poor.

Fr. Mundy had the desire to be a missionary. His dream and prayers were answered when he became a missionary in the Ogdensburg Peruvian Apostolate serving in St. Martin de Porras Parish in Mollendo, Peru from 1995 until the mission was turned over to Peruvian priests in 2003. Fr. Mundy enjoyed his parishioners with great interest and care for all ages. He especially delighted in church processions and native dancing to bring people together to celebrate. He was an honored Volunteer fireman revered as always ready to respond to a call. The children loved to gather around him and share stories. As always, he had candy treats.

Upon hearing about his death from Fr. Jay Seymour, the current pastor in Mollendo, Padre Andrés Márquez Quin­tanilla wrote: “We are saddened by the death of Fr. Patrick. We celebrated Mass today for him. We remember him as a man of faith with great love of the Eucharist, simple, humble, joyful and above all very charitable. Please send this message to Bishop Terry LaValley and all in the diocese.”

From the fall Extension Magazine, let this Prayer to St. Martin de Porres be our prayer for Fr. Mundy a man whose life modeled that of St. Martin.

Lord Jesus Christ, who inflamed the heart of St. Martin
With an ardent love of the poor
And who taught him the wisdom of always surrendering To God’s holy will,
Grant that like him, we may be ever truly humble of heart And full of Christ-like charity for suffering humanity
Amen
