CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

In his annual Christmas message, Bishop Terry R. LaValley reminds us of the words of Matthew’s Gospel, read at the Christmas Vigil, “The virgin shall be with child and give birth to a son, and they shall call him Emmanuel, ‘a name which means God is with us’” (Mt. 1:22-23). Sometimes, when faced with the uncertainties and anxieties of life, it’s difficult to remember this awesome mystery of our faith: throughout all life’s struggles, God is with us!

Pope: Don't be afraid to ask for things in prayer

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — No one should be afraid to turn to God with prayer, especially in times of great doubt, suffering and need, Pope Francis said.

Jesus does not want people to become numb to life’s problems and “extinguish” those things that make them human when they pray, the pope said Dec. 12 during his weekly general audience in the Paul VI audience hall.

“He does not want us to smother our questions and requests, learning to put up with everything. Instead, he wants every pain, every apprehension to rise up to heaven and become a dialogue” with God, the father, he said.

Continuing a new series of audience talks on the Our Father, the pope reflected on the simplicity of the prayer and the way it addresses God with intimate familiarity.

With this prayer, Jesus shows an “audacious” way to address God immediately as “our Father” without any pomp and “preambles,” the pope said.

“He doesn’t say to turn to God calling him ‘O, the All-Powerful’ or ‘O, the One on high,’ or ‘O, You who are so far from us and I am the wretched one ....’”

“No. He doesn’t say that, but simply (uses) the word, ‘Father,’ with great simplicity, like children who turn to their daddy. This word, ‘Father,’ expresses intimacy, filial trust,” he said.
‘I’m not very good at Christian love’

Christmas is the season of love. It’s when we celebrate that God loves us so much, He sent His Son to the world to save us and give us eternal life.

It’s also when we share our love with the people closest to us, sharing gifts with family, friends and beloved colleagues.

The Catechism of the Catholic Church, borrowing a line from St. Thomas Aquinas, says "To love is to will the good of another." Reflecting on that concept, I discovered something: I’m not very good at Christian love.

Often, in the context of a friendship or relationship of any type, I’m instinctively looking for reciprocity. If I do a favor for a loved one, I often find myself expecting that favor be returned when I’m in need. That’s not willing the good of another, it’s willing the good of another with the expectation that they’ll do something good for me. That’s not love.

If you had asked me several months ago, I would’ve told you my marriage is a 50-50 partnership. Lately, however, it hasn’t been so balanced. As I struggled with my recent health problems, my husband kept our family and household running. The balance was tipped. Instead of both of us carrying the load and dividing duties, and supporting each other equally, he had to handle almost everything, including providing care for me. The split was closer to 95-5.

The same is true in friendships. While it would be awesome if our friends could be available to help and support us every time we need them, that’s not always possible. Sometimes, there’s an imbalance. Sometimes one friend needs the other more. Sometimes one has more — more time, more emotional energy, more resources — to give. It’s those times when love is imbalanced, the times when someone needs us but can’t give anything in return, that we show real love. And isn’t that the most important gift we can give?

Speaking of gifts, as we celebrate Christmas this edition, I’d like to thank you, the readers of The NCC, for your continued support.

Your kind notes, Christmas cards, compliments and even occasional criticism have been gifts to me this year. I cherish them.

On behalf of myself, Editorial Assistant Christine Ward, and all the NCC columnists, contributing writers and photographers, The North Country Catholic wishes you all a merry and blessed Christmas.

Christmas greetings from Father Bill

Happy Christmas! Today’s column will be my Christmas card to you all!

I want to use this opportunity to wish you all, who join me each week, a happy and peace-filled celebration of the Birth of Jesus. Our Christmas celebration is a time to remember that Jesus, the Son of God, came to our world to show us how sacred and blessed this race of people is. Jesus is one of us. Jesus came to make our world a better place. At Christmas, we are reminded that we, as disciples of Jesus, must live as blessed people; Jesus was one of us, and we can do so much to make our world happier and a better place.

I want you to thank you all for being a part of my family each week as readers of this column. I think of you each time I sit down to write the next edition. Today, at this Christmas time, I promise to remember you all in a special way in my Christmas Masses. My prayer is that God fills this New Year with happiness for you and your families.

Christmas is all about gratitude. I know that I have so much to be grateful for this Christmas. I hope you do, also. I thank God for Jesus’ presence in my life and this world. Jesus came to transform this world. Jesus transforms my world; he supports and brings his peace and love into all that I do. Jesus strengthens my faith, and his forgiving love brings peace to all that I do. Each Christmas as I celebrate the birth of my Savior, I celebrate with gratitude for all that the Lord brings into my life — so many gifts. I know how blessed we are. Jesus was one of us.

There are so many others in my life that I think of and pray for in gratitude each Christmas. I want to send my gratitude to my two editors this year, my two bosses. The North Country Catholic has gone through a smooth transition this year. I want to thank Mary Lou Kilian, my editor for many years. She was the one who invited me to write this column and was always there to support my efforts. I was truly blessed to work for her. Thanks, Mary Lou.

And now, a note of gratitude to our present editor, Darcy Fargo. She is becoming an excellent part of our diocesan staff. I have noticed her love for the North Country Catholic and for the Diocese of Ogdensburg. Thank you, Darcy.

As I continue along this Christmas Card, I would like to add my gratitude to our Bishop, Bishop Terry LaValley. Bishop LaValley has demonstrated often his loving spirit and dedicated concern for the Diocese of Ogdensburg. He has met this challenging time for our Catholic Church with courage and boldness. I thank him for this. We are fortunate as a diocese to have such a great Bishop. Thank you, God, for sending us, Bishop LaValley.

So many more that I am grateful for this Christmas. I thank God for the many dedicated and hardworking priests, my brothers in the Lord’s ministry. I remember also the many dedicated deacons in our parishes. I thank God for the many loving and faith-filled Sisters who minister in the parishes of this diocese. They add so much enthusiasm and life to the Church’s work.

I want to add a note of gratitude to God for the many wonderful families that make our parishes such great communities. I have been privileged to know and work with so many families as a pastor. Now, as I travel around to other parishes helping pastors, I continue to meet and recognize so many great families. We are so blessed in this diocese. They make the life of this diocese alive and Christ filled.

Finally, a quick thank you to my own family who are such a support to me.
Emmanuel: God is with you!

Dear Sisters and Brothers in Christ:

At the Christmas Vigil Mass, we will hear St. Matthew tell us that “All this happened to fulfill what the Lord had said through the prophet: ‘The virgin shall be with child and give birth to a son, and they shall call him Emmanuel,’ a name which means God is with us” (Mt. 1:22-23).

Sometimes, when faced with the uncertainties and anxieties of life, it’s difficult to remember this awesome mystery of our faith: throughout all life’s struggles, God is with us!

To migrant families who are frightened and feel so vulnerable because government leaders have failed you – Emmanuel: God is with you! To children robbed of innocence because Church leaders have failed you – Emmanuel: God is with you! To moms, dads and children in Latakia and so many other places who are terrorized and feel isolated because you courageously live your Christian faith – Emmanuel: God is with you! Yes, believe it: God is with us! Our God never fails us.

Christmas 2018 is a beautiful occasion to recommit ourselves to embracing this truth of our faith. God has entered our world, was born among us, never to abandon us. Our God’s unconditional love and boundless mercy became flesh in the Person of Jesus Christ so that we might touch and see God’s constant compassion for every one of us.

In many ways, this has been a painful year. However, the upcoming days of the Christmas season are a graced time for you and me to focus our prayerful attention on all who yearn to experience, in a tangible way, God’s Presence in their lives. In this moment, when the Babe of Bethlehem brings light into gloom and darkness and the heavenly choirs sing of God’s Peace, we seek forgiveness and conversion of heart for the times we have failed to be instruments of God’s loving and merciful presence...when we have fostered polarization rather than reconciliation and healing.

Advent, Christmas, 2019 – all indicators that this is a time of new beginnings. May the Christ Child bring you and your loved ones the Gift of Love, the Blessing of Hope and the Promise of Peace. A blessed Christmas and joy-filled New Year!

Faithfully yours in Christ,

Most Reverend Terry R. LaValley
Bishop of Ogdensburg
Capital campaign progressing toward goal

The It's Our Church, It's Our Future diocesan capital campaign has now reached $13.2 million in gifts and pledges, and $14.3 million has been raised or projected in all the parishes of the diocese via capital campaign fundraising efforts.

“The momentum has continued at the years end and we hope will have one-final push at the beginning of 2019 before the active phase wraps up,” said Diocese of Ogdensburg Director of Development Scott Lalone. “Once again the people in the diocese continue to show their support for our church of the North Country in so many ways, and we are very grateful.”

The 19 parishes in Block 1 began collecting gifts back in April and have produced $3 million in gifts and pledges to date.

Another 40 parishes from Block 2 participated in the summer months and, at this point, have generated over $4.7 million in gifts and pledges.

Another 35 parishes in Block 3 held their commitment weekends in November and are presently doing follow-ups. Those parishes will complete their active phase in the early part of 2019. Block 3 parishes have raised $4.6 million in gifts and pledges.

Block 4 consists of one parish that conducted their capital campaign prior to the diocesan capital campaign and two parishes with early start dates in the diocesan capital campaign. These parishes have currently raised $1.7 million with another $247,000 projected in two years from an additional parish that will be participating at that time.

Twenty-five parishes have gone over their goal and another 23 Parishes have hit 75 percent of their goal or higher. This all with Block 3 parishes still in their active phase.

Of the funds raised after $1.3 million is committed to the 2018 Bishop’s Fund Appeal, 75 percent will remain at the parish level to fund direct needs such as parish programs, ministries and capital improvements. Each parish developed its own case statement outlining how funds raised will address their specific needs. The remaining 25 percent supports the parishes’ indirect needs such as Our Retired Priests, Our Seminarians, Camp Guggenheim and Our Cathedral.

If you are still prayerfully considering your gift to the capital campaign, please remember that the Bishop’s Fund Appeal will return in September 2019 and your continued support to your parish offer- tory, and other special collections remain vital to your parish.

The consulting firm Guidance in Giving has been assisting the diocese with this campaign.

Feasting on the fruits of the earth and the Spirit

Have you ever given or received a basket of fruit for Christmas? At the turn of the last century, good children received their only orange for the year as a Christmas gift. This was a real treat as tropical and fresh fruits were not readily eaten by the average family.

How might this custom of giving fruit as a gift be connected to our celebration of Christmas?

As we read the Scriptures, we often see that celebrating the Lord's presence among them was symbolized by feasting on the delicious fruits of the earth. For example:

“And I brought you into a plentiful land to enjoy its fruits and its good things.” - Jeremiah 2:7

“As a Christmas symbol, fruit recalls the twelve Fruits of the Holy Spirit. These Fruits result from the activity of the Gifts of the Holy Spirit in our lives. The Twelve Fruits of the Holy Spirit are: Charity (love), Joy, Peace, Patience, Benignity (Kindness), Goodness, Long-suffering (Patiently Bearing Suffering over a Long Period of Time), Mildness, Faith, Modesty, Purity, Chastity.” - Galatians 5:22

As we enjoy the fruits of the earth that bedeck our tables at Christmas and the many gifts of the Spirit that help us to live as followers of the Lord Jesus, let us call to mind our many blessings.

Let us pray:

We praise You, Lord God, for teaching us that the earth and its fullness belong to you and we thank you for giving us the most urgent of tasks: to protect, heal and honor your gift of Creation and the Gifts of your Spirit to know how to do it. AMEN

Itinerant preacher: Capuchin leads bishops' retreat

VATICAN CITY (CNS) - For more than 38 years, Capuchin Father Raniero Cantalamessa has preached to the pope and top officials of the Roman Curia. In early January, he will lead the weeklong retreat of the U.S. bishops.

As they continue to study and discuss ways to respond to the clerical sexual abuse crisis, the bishops will gather for the retreat Jan. 2-8 at Mundelein Seminary near Chicago.

Pope Francis suggested the bishops hold the retreat and offered the services of the 84-year-old Father Cantalamessa, who has served as preacher of the papal household since 1980.

In an email Dec. 6, the Capuchin declined to be interviewed about the retreat, saying, "At this delicate moment in the life of the U.S. church, I don't believe it would be opportune for me to give interviews."

The theme of the U.S. bishops' retreat will be "the mission of the apostles and of their successors" and will draw from Mark 3:14, which says Jesus "appointed 12 - whom he also named apostles - that they might be with him and he might send them forth to preach."

Greg Burke, director of the Vatican press office, told Catholic News Service, "You can see why the pope asked the bishops to make the retreat together in what he told the bishops of Chile: without faith and without prayer, fraternity is impossible."

"At a moment like this, the bishops need to be united in prayer, and Catholics in the U.S. should see them at prayer," Burke said Dec. 13. "A retreat is always a time for conversion, and perhaps there's been no time in the U.S. with more need for conversion than now."

The job of "preacher of the papal household" is not a full time position; each year it requires the priest to give an average of eight meditations - one each on most Fridays of Advent and Lent - and the homily during the pope's Good Friday celebration of the Lord's Passion.

The title, and the ministry, has a very long history. Superiors of different religious orders took turns preaching to the pontiff and his aides during Advent and Lent until the mid-1500s, when Pope Paul IV appointed the first preacher of the papal household; his successors followed suit, always choosing a religious-order priest for the job.

Pope Benedict XIV decided in 1743 to be more specific, decreeing that the preacher of the papal household always be a Capuchin friar.

St. John Paul II asked Father Cantalamessa to take the job in 1980; since then, the Capuchin has given more than 300 spiritual talks and homilies to the popes and their closest aides in the Roman Curia.

When he is not preaching to the pope, Father Cantalamessa leads retreats around the world, writes books and articles and works with charismatic Catholics; in late October, he was named ecclesial adviser of "Charis," the new international coordinating body for the Catholic charismatic renewal.

In a 2015 interview with CNS, he said the first time he climbed the steps to the lectern in St. Peter's Basilica to preach to the pope on Good Friday, "It felt like I was climbing Mount Everest."
Our families can learn from the Holy Family

Every year, the church celebrates the Feast of the Holy Family – Jesus, Mary, & Joseph – on the Sunday within the Octave of Christmas. And that means a celebration of family life – births, weddings, funerals, anniversaries.

In the first reading, we hear about a joyous birth, that of Samuel. After years of prayer, Hannah and Elkanah are granted a son. As soon as Samuel is weaned, the mother fulfills her promise and raises him up to the Lord’s service at the shrine at Shiloh.

What’s the point? Trusting in the Lord bears fruit. Children are a gift from God, and they always belong to God. Parents do not own their children. They are guardians to whom God entrusts their education and upbringing.

So we call Jesus, Mary and Joseph the Holy Family, and paintings always place a halo over their heads.

In order for us to see how this family encountered problems just like other families, the Gospel chosen for this Sunday is about Jesus’ boyhood years. Joseph is by now a carpenter in Nazareth, and Mary is a busy housewife and mother of a teenager! As parents, Mary and Joseph are well aware of their responsibilities. Being God’s divine Son does not prevent Jesus, however, from acting with all the inexperience and spontaneous behavior of any normal 12-year-old boy.

What an exciting experience for a boy from a small town to travel to Jerusalem for the feast.

Fascinated with the learned teachers He found in the Temple, he loses track of time and, like most teenagers, doesn’t think about the terror that a missing child can cause for parents.

After three frantic days of searching, they find him, only to hear Jesus rather naively ask, “Didn’t you realize I had to be in my Father’s house?”

No, they don’t understand, but they tuck it away in their hearts, along with a lot of other unanswered questions. Mary and Joseph, like millions of other parents, were acting as good, responsible caregivers who are having difficulty understanding their son.

So what else is new! Teenagers don’t understand themselves either. Was Jesus just carried away with impatience to start His ministry?

For Joseph and Mary, the fact that Jesus was divine made his actions all the more mystifying to them.

What Jesus did after that is really the great lesson for all families: He humbly bowed to their authority. When he saw how upset they were, he promptly left the Temple, and went back obediently to Nazareth where he “advanced in age and grace and wisdom.”

The second reading gives a great recipe for successful family relationships. What makes a family “holy”?

It’s all so simple! Just love, communicate with, and forgive one another, and keep the commandments!

Of course, simple answers like that are the hardest to accept!

John says we must believe in the Son and keep his commandments. Joseph was totally committed to heading this “holy family” because the Angel told him to: Mary, at the risk of her reputation, gave birth to Jesus and was a faithful, protective mother because God wanted it. And Jesus was a faithful son, subservient to human parents because his heavenly Father willed it so!

Our families would find their disagreements, stressful relationships, and resentments that spoil the joy of family harmony so much easier to solve by imitating the faith and loving trust of the Holy Family.

Charity is our business this Christmas season

The following editorial, provided by Catholic News Services, was originally published by the Rhode Island Catholic, the newspaper of the Diocese of Providence.

Charles Dickens’ novella “A Christmas Carol,” which was published in 1843, is a story that transcends the time in which it was written. Even though it was a fictional story, Dickens depicted the cultural influences, steeped in Victorian mores, which formed the Western ideal for the celebration of Christmas.

The protagonist in the story is Ebenezer Scrooge, a miserly London-based money lender, is described in the story as “a squeezing, wrenching, grasping, scraping, clutching, covetous old sinner!”

He represents today the person who hates humanity: He’s pro-choice, selfish, self-centered and looked at others as mere tools for his pleasure.

Scrooge was visited by the ghost of Jacob Marley, his old partner, who wanders the earth entwined by heavy chains and money boxes forged during a lifetime of greed and selfishness.

Scrooge did not understand why Marley was in such a state of suffering stating, “But you were always a good man of business, Jacob,” Marley cries out.

“Business!” exclaims the ghost, wringing its hands again. “Mankind was my business! The common welfare was my business; charity, mercy, forbearance and benevolence were all my business. The dealings of my trade were but a drop of water in the comprehensive ocean of my business!”

Scrooge would be later visited by three “spirits” who reminded Scrooge of the true meaning of Christmas.

He became a changed man who made humanity his business.

As we prepare this Advent for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, let us be mindful of those who are struggling, suffering and looking to us for help.

Charity is our business, and may we give generously to those who are needy during this season, imitating the love of God and love of our neighbors.
NEW YORK (CNS) — The phrase "a city on the move" is usually just an expression. Not so in "Mortal Engines" (Universal), director Christian Rivers’ screen version of Philip Reeve’s novel for young adults.

In this adventure’s dystopian far future, huge mobile cities roam around battling one another for scarce resources.

It’s a bit of spectacle Rivers pulls off nicely. But once the wow factor has worn off, it becomes apparent that the emphasis on special effects has marginalized the human element in the movie.

Throw in some flat dialogue from screenwriters Fran Walsh, Philippa Boyens and Peter Jackson and the whole project winds up registering as visually impressive but dramatically sterile.

Christian viewers, moreover, may feel somewhat uneasy about the fact that Valentine’s lab is housed in St. Paul’s Cathedral, though the dialogue indicates that this is meant to be seen as an incongruous setting for his evil activities.

As a cautionary tale about the dangers of advanced weaponry with relatively few objectionable elements, "Mortal Engines" is probably acceptable for older teens.

The film contains much combat and other violence with some gore, a mild oath, a few scatological jokes and at least one crass term.

Though Tom survives, he falls off London in the process, and he and Hester find themselves fighting for their lives in the wilderness.

They eventually put aside their differences and join forces to fight Valentine’s attempt to gain dominance for London by reviving the doomsday armaments that long ago destroyed all civilization.

They’re aided in the later stages of their struggle by Anna Fang (Jihae), a glamorous outlaw. But they’re also stalked doggedly by Shrike (Stephen Lang), an unstoppable human-android amalgam Valentine unleashes to pursue them.

Despite the appealing leads and the innovative gesture of featuring a heroine whose face is disfigured by scars – Hester was wounded in Valentine’s attack on her mother – the picture, though lavish, comes across as wanting.

The odd-couple love story at the center of the plot involves Tom Natsworthy (Robert Sheehan), a contented citizen of the film’s locomotive London where he works in the equivalent of the British Museum and rebel warrior Hester Shaw (Hera Hilmar).

After attempting to kill one of the British metropolis’ leading citizens, archaeologist Thaddeus Valentine (Hugo Weaving) – in vengeance, she claims, for Valentine’s long-ago murder of her mother – Hester makes her escape. Only moments later, Valentine decides Tom has heard too much of Hester’s story and secretly tries to liquidate him.

What is Christmas?

It isn’t just a starry night
Or Snowflakes on the ground.
It isn’t just a merry hearth
With good friends gathered ‘round.

It isn’t just a Christmas tree,
Or gifts that play the part;
But Love and Peace
The Season brings
To touch the seeking heart.

— By Roxie Lusk Smith

There is love and peace in the developing countries because of missionaries.
Yes, missionaries like yourselves let the love of Christ shine in the lives of people in the missions as they receive your generous donations.
On behalf of missionaries and the people they serve who benefit from the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, the Holy Childhood Association and the Missionaries Projects of the Diocese of Ogdensburg, I thank you for your support.
Your continued generosity touches the needy hearts of the suffering and poor in the mission lands.

“The Lord has done great things for us, and we are filled with joy.” Psalm 126:3 On behalf of the mission office, please accept our prayers of gratitude for you. God bless you and your loved ones.

Please remember “The Society for the Propagation of the Faith” when writing or changing your Will.

Faith advocates see victories in new farm bill

WASHINGTON (CNS) - The farm bill that passed both houses of Congress by wide margins doesn't have money in it to protect endangered species, but it did preserve one that had been on the threatened list: bipartisanship.

"We were so excited that the Senate acted like grown-ups," said Sister Simone Campbell, executive director of Network, a Catholic social justice lobby.

"They actually did governance, and they had hearings, and Sen. (Pat) Roberts (a Republican) from Kansas: I rarely agree with him on anything, so this was an amazing project he led, focused on the needs of the people involved," Sister Campbell said Dec. 13. "It was far beyond partisanship in actually trying to make government work."

Jim Ennis, executive director of Catholic Rural Life, was happy Congress acted relatively swiftly. This was the first time a farm bill passed without needing an extension of the expiring version since 1990, when George H.W. Bush was president.

Not all farmers will reap benefits from the farm bill. "We've got lots of folks hurting in rural communities," Ennis told CNS Dec. 14, "but you can't put everything in one bill. You just can't."

Sister Campbell, a Sister of Social Service, gave Roberts, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, credit for "listening to many of the agricultural workers in Kansas who use SNAP (the federal Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program) in the off-season."

Farmers who hire the farmworkers, she said, "depend on their workers being able to eat," and Roberts saw this "through the eyes of the farmworkers and the farmers."

She added Roberts was "helped by the changing politics in Kansas, which has moved significantly away from the hyperpartisan, punitive approach. ... I think it was a combination of his experience, the experience of his people, and the November election."

Sister Campbell also lauded Roberts' Democratic counterpart on the committee, Sen. Debbie Stabenow of Michigan: "She has worked hard to put together a very collaborative relationship with him, so together, they could create a bill they could be proud of."

The Senate passed the farm bill in a 87-13 vote Dec. 11. The House passed it 369-47 Dec. 12. The bill was awaiting the signature of President Donald Trump.

One point of contention between the original House and Senate versions was a provision in the House bill that would have imposed stricter work requirements for SNAP eligibility, with stretches of SNAP ineligibility growing longer each time a recipient failed to report their work, or looking for work, in a timely manner. The House ultimately removed that from its version of the bill.

"We actually got most of the stuff that we wanted," Sister Campbell told CNS in a telephone interview. While she said she sees farm subsidies as "a little excessive," the final bill "maintained pretty much the existing protections for farm runoff and the fertilizers used and that sort of thing. So I don't have complaints on that side. Certainly, after what we were facing in the House, I'm certainly not complaining about the nutritional title."

"It's a rare day for me to not complain about something."

"They decided we can't keep doing that to our farmers," Ennis said of the extensions lawmakers passed in all the previous farm bills over close to the last 30 years.

"It helps, too, that the (Republican-led) House felt under pressure due to the change in leadership (in January)," he told CNS. "They have the control now, but in the future, they would be losing control. So they made some concessions, but passed something they can live with."

Having a farm bill in place, he added, gives farmers "stability for planning for next year."

Dairy farmers, while they will see gradual opening of Canadian markets as sources for their goods under this bill, would be one focus of a future bill should one be submitted, Ennis said.

"There are a lot of dairy farmers hurting right now because of low prices," he added. "It's just very difficult to find markets that will pay a reasonable price."

Ennis said the future of family farms, with a focus on dairy farmers, will be the main topic in a future issue of Catholic Rural Life's quarterly magazine.
