Thirsty souls quenched by God

VATICAN CITY (CNS) - The yearning for one's soul to be quenched must not be confused with longing for worldly desires, a Portuguese priest told Pope Francis and senior members of the Roman Curia during their Lenten retreat.

The spiritual significance of thirst is a reminder that all Christians must distinguish between a true desire to satisfy their spiritual needs and the false satisfaction given by worldly possessions where "pleasure, passion and joy are exhausted in a wild consumerism," Father Jose Tolentino de Mendonca, vice rector of the Catholic University of Lisbon, said Feb. 19, according to Vatican Radio.

"Let us not confuse desire with need. Desire is a lack that is never completely satisfied, it is a tension, a wound that is always open, an endless" need for something from outside oneself, he said.

EDITOR’S NOTE

Dreaming of the perfect wedding

Forty years ago, I had a dream that was nothing less than a nightmare!

In the last few months before our summer wedding, my mind was focused on one critical decision after another: the invitations, bridesmaids’ dresses, the band for the reception, the vows we were writing and on and on and on.

One of the final details on our list was flowers for the church which certainly had a place on the extensive to-do list.

But my sleeping brain went into a panic as I dreamed my way through a wedding without boutonnieres and bouquets. What could be more mortifying??

Thank goodness that, by the first of July, all was in place for our special day.

The path towards that perfect wedding gets a little crazy for future brides and grooms who are willing to spend months of their lives and thousands of their dollars in its pursuit. I dare say it’s even crazier today than it was back in 1978!

But wise young people today, just like in the old days, know that the most important preparation they make is for the months and years that follow even the most perfect wedding day.

Such wisdom extends to the Catholic Church which offers support for married couples through every stage of their lives together.

The vocation of marriage is always the focus of the North Country Catholic’s annual wedding issue. This year, we can point to a special life and family conference “Marriage: God Calls, We Respond” to be held April 14 in Massena.

The Family Life Department along with the offices of Vocations and New Evangelization are combining forces to bring Dr. Gregory and Lisa Popcak. This conference aims to build up marriage and family life in the North Country and help married couples and those thinking of marriage understand the importance of the vocation of marriage as a path to holiness for themselves, their spouse and their children.

And, in the meantime, we can thank the bishops of the United States for bringing together educational and spiritual resources to help couples of all stages of life to live out a happy, holy marriage.

After all happy, holy marriages are good for spouses, good for our church and most certainly, good for our world.

FATHER MUECHEN SAYS

As members of God’s Kingdom, we all matter

I hope that you remember the Gospel reading at Mass on the First Sunday of Lent. Each year the Gospel reading on that Sunday is the same story which appears in each of the Synoptic Gospels. Jesus is led by the Holy Spirit into the desert for 40 days and 40 nights. When I read this I think of Jesus making a retreat in preparation for his public ministry.

This story has become an image for our Lent. The desert that Jesus entered was not one of those sand dune kinds. Rather, it was a barren, rocky, unproductive land. Truly it is still a desert. It never rains there.

My experience of a desert was the stretch of land around our parish in Mollendo, Peru. All the way up to the city of Arequipa, a trip of about 50 miles, it is all desert, a rocky and barren land. What I discovered was that the desert soil was productive; all it needed was water.

Halfway up the road to the city, there is an irrigation project. A section of this desert is heavily irrigated and it is green. The land is truly productive with crops and animals. It is quite a sight!

The section of the country is rather spectacular all because of water. The rest of the area in between is barren and rocky with no water.

The Gospel story tells us that in the desert Jesus was tempted by Satan. I have no idea what this experience was like for Jesus but I have some thoughts of my own about this situation.

So, I want you to consider this scenario: Do you suppose the tempter was trying to discourage Jesus from ever beginning this public ministry, his teaching and preaching to come?

The challenge might have been this: “You are only one person. What can one person accomplish? No one is going to listen to you. No one is going to accept you. You are going to be disappointed. All this will fail.”

Of course, Jesus was never distracted by all this.

I have a feeling that all of us have suffered through similar temptations, maybe many times. Such a temptation begins with doubts about ourselves, as a person. After all, you are only one person – do you really matter? Do you think you have any real value? Does what you do or say really matter to anyone? Can you ever believe that the way you live your Christian life will bring anyone closer to the Lord?

Will it ever make the world a better place?

I can tell you that I know that many times I have been confronted with just such temptations. Certainly, I was just one person – would anyone really care what I did or said or wrote. Have you ever been there? I suspect you have.

Jesus came to our world and continues to come to us to help us overcome just such temptations. Jesus’ message through Scriptures and through our Catholic Church is that our lives matter. They are important and meaningful to God. We are disciples of the Lord and the Lord needs us to bring his message to our world.

Jesus wants us to be members of the Kingdom of God and, as such, we truly matter. Our actions demonstrate our own commitment to our faith in the Lord and the message of Jesus. We are witnesses to our belief in God before the whole world, our world.

You do matter. Jesus wants you to be his disciples in all ways, in all that we do and say. Let the world know and recognize our faith in Jesus. People notice you.

Finally, a quote from Thomas Merton from his book, “Conjectures of a Guilty Bystander”: “To live well myself is my first and essential contribution to the well-being of all mankind and to the fulfillment of our collective destiny. If I do not live happily myself how can I help anyone else to be happy, or free, or wise?”

Funeral held Feb. 20 for Mercy Sister

LAKE PLACID – A Mass of Christian Burial for Mercy Sister Mary Paula Richard, 93, was held Feb. 20 at the Reiss Memorial Chapel at Elderwood at Uihlein of Lake Placid.

She died Feb. 16 at Elderwood. Spring burial will be St. Alphonsus Cemetery in Tupper Lake.

Sister Mary Paula was born Sept. 7, 1924, in Ogdensburg, the daughter of Frank and Mary Emma (Lanthier) Richard.

She entered the Sisters of Mercy in Tarrytown, NY in 1942 and after final profession began her professional career by becoming a student nurse in Mercy Hospital Watertown.

Over the years Sister Mary Paula was an operating nurse, head nurse, director of nursing service, purchasing agent, community coordinator and manager of the Mercy vacation house Villa Catherine.

She served in Tupper Lake, Port Jarvis, Watertown and British Guiana.

After retirement, Sister Mary Paula spent several years with the Sisters of St. Joseph in Watertown. In 2007 she relocated to St. Margaret Convent in Lake Placid and became a Friendship Volunteer for Mercy Care for the Adirondacks.

She was predeceased by her brothers, William and Father Charles Richard, a priest of the Diocese of Ogdensburg.

Call to family, community, participation

By Stephen Tartaglia
Diocesan family life director

Third in series

The person is not only sacred but also social. How we organize our society - in economics and politics, in law and policy - directly affects human dignity and the capacity of individuals to grow in community. We believe people have a right and a duty to participate in society, seeking together the common good and well-being of all, especially the poor and vulnerable. Marriage and the family are the central social institutions that must be supported and strengthened, not undermined. (USCCB, Seven Themes of Catholic Social Teaching)

The mission of the Christian family is to sanctify and transform our present society according to God’s plan (Familiaris Consortio, #52). Spouses are responsible to help each other get to heaven, generate children, and raise their children to be physically, mentally, and spiritually healthy.

The Catechism (#2202), says that the traditional nuclear family, the man and woman united in marriage and their children, is the norm and that public authorities have an obligation to recognize it.

Families are good for society. Studies have shown that traditional nuclear families are economically stronger, more law abiding, more active politically, more productive with fewer days off work and/or school, have less childhood poverty, and their children experience better educational outcomes, and present less of a financial burden on the state than other non-traditional families.

The Church and the State have, historically, both supported families. The rights of families are listed in Familiaris Consortio, #46. The link between healthy families and healthy society is so strong that governments recognized a vested interest in protecting families and supporting rights that correspond to their familial duties. Many Supreme Court cases over the past hundred years have supported family autonomy and parental authority.

Over the past several decades the traditional family form has given way to adaptations brought on by the prevalence of such things as same-sex relationships, divorce, and out-of-wedlock pregnancies. These adaptations are problematic for children raised in conditions that are less than ideal and have placed the government in a strangely contradictory position. It still sees the value in supporting families but, in doing so, it often works against the traditional family, perpetuating problems which caused the rise of alternative forms in the first place.

The Church teaches that sexual intercourse is an expression of love only proper between a man and woman married to each other and their intercourse must be open to the transmission of life. Sexual intercourse outside of this context is seriously immoral and a grave sin. Society’s very contradictory view separates love and life from the act of sexual intercourse, emphasizes pleasure, and proclaims that everyone has the right to express sexuality however he or she chooses just so long as ‘it doesn’t hurt anyone else.’

Ironically, this faulty viewpoint hurts other people, especially women and children. Women are seen as objects to be used rather than equal partners to be loved and cherished.

Children are no longer seen as good in and of themselves and contributing to the welfare of their parents. They are viewed as burdens, less than human, equivalent to pets, to be had for the pleasure or usefulness they bring to the parent, to be prevented or killed if they are not wanted. Children living in family adaptations are frequently deprived of at least one of their biological parents, at higher risk for physical or sexual abuse, more likely to have failed marriages themselves and to struggle with anxiety.

The last 50 years shows clearly that Pope Paul VI’s four predictions in Humanae Vitae have come true. He said that if Church teaching on contraception was disregarded there would be an increase in marital infidelity; a general lowering of moral standards; a loss of respect for women because man would ‘reduce her to being a mere instrument for the satisfaction of his own desires’; and that governments would coerce people into using contraception and intervene in citizens’ sexual relationships. Nothing undermines families more than society’s faulty view on sexuality, and this is precisely what leads to most adaptations in family structure. The adaptations themselves should not be promoted nor encouraged.

On the other hand, the people who live in those adaptations are vulnerable and must be supported both materially and spiritually. Family Law must, wherever possible, focus on restoring and promoting a healthy relationship between children and their biological parents, instead of separating them.

All families need help. When we consider helping families through public policy, we need to be clear that the help we are providing is in accord with Catholic teaching. We should oppose laws that increase the availability of pornography, harmful recreational drugs, gambling, abortion, or which allow euthanasia.

Types of policies we should support include: paid family leave, immigration policies that keep families together, living wage, affordable housing, and parental choice in education.

One wedding, six years, two moves, two children, and several jobs later, Seth and Amanda (Miner) Coughlin find their love is stronger than ever. “Marriage has really exceeded our expectations,” Seth explains. “We are just awed by the ways God has blessed us.”

When the couple, who met as students at DeSales University, married in 2011, they had strong faith and a clear understanding of the vocation they were committing to. In fact, Amanda had previously considered religious life, and Seth had discerned priesthood years before they knew each other. Then, as their friendship deepened, they sought to know if marriage was God’s plan for them and prayerfully discerned that it was.

The pair chose to be married on October 1, the Feast of St. Therese of Lisieux, to whom both have a deep devotion.

“Our wedding was not just a party for Amanda and me,” Seth recalls. The day was all centered around the Eucharist.”

Amanda adds that even Seth’s Methodist relatives were moved by the Mass and marriage ceremony. “Those family members told us that ours was the most beautiful wedding they had ever been to.”

The first year of marriage found the couple working in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, living comfortably.

“Money was not an issue then,” Seth relates. “We did not have financial worries and were pretty focused on ourselves.” Then, wanting to settle near one family or the other (Seth’s in Pittsburgh; Amanda’s in Saranac Lake), they moved to the North Country when jobs opportunities arose here.

Seth taught theology at IHC in Watertown while Amanda served as campus minister in Canton.

“Then Emma was conceived, and life was no longer about us and our enjoyment,” says Seth. “Our son John arrived less than two years after Emma. The personal and financial demands increased. But watching the two of us expanding into a family has been a very deep joy!”

Amanda agrees. “Watching our children, the embodiment of our love, is so amazing. Your kids force you to be more selfless. I saw this in Seth right after John was born. I had an epidural which led to complications; Seth was there for me, patient and loving and selfless. That difficult time, like all our challenges, made our love so much stronger! Looking back, God is always working through our rough patches and our imperfections to bring us closer to him and to each other.”

“We have seen how God has led us,” Amanda continues. “We moved up here because we were both offered jobs. Then my grandfather was diagnosed with cancer. I was quite close to him and was glad I could spend more time with him.

Recently, it was providential that Seth’s co-worker told him about a job opening for prison chaplain. When Seth applied, one else had taken that position, so they offered Seth a job in Malone. The timing was perfect, just before Christmas break. Looking back, we see God’s plan and timing is always perfect.”

Seth agrees. “I loved teaching, but it is a job that never stops. Now I am not legally allowed to bring work home—so when I’m home, I’m home. Because it provides better income and more time with my family, this job allows me to be a better husband and father, which is my primary vocation.”

Amanda is grateful that her job - campus minister for St. Lawrence and SUNY Canton - respects her family responsibilities.

“The church has been wonderful in letting me flex my schedule,” she said. “How do they juggle all this?

“We do tend to realize when we are burning out and need to reconnect,” Amanda said. “We know date nights are important and plan them whenever we can. “Our marriage is the foundation of our family, so we do our best to put each other first.”

Seth echoes: “My spouse is my best friend, so we make time to have fun together, to laugh together, and to enjoy each other. We support one another in every way possible.

That includes respecting each other’s love languages. Saya Amanda, “Mine involves touch and quality time; Seth’s is words of affirmation. After six years, I understand this, but at first it was so foreign. Speaking the other’s love language means coming out of self to love the other.”

Any advice for young couple? “Sunday Mass as a family is essential. The Eucharist must be the center of your life and love. Christ gave all, and we must be willing to do the same. Confession is very important to growing in virtue because through it God gives the grace we need. Take the time to learn the richness of Church teaching on marriage and sexuality. Learn what the Church means by love: a choice to will the good of the other.

“The most important thing is to stay rooted in Christ, realizing that marriage will be hard, but it will be good, better than you can imagine.”

Environmental Stewardship

Making choices
Last week we heard from members of the 2018 Catholic Social Ministry Gathering who meet in February to address the topic “Soli­darity in Our Common Home.”

We as church members may not be aware of how our behavior towards our environment may have negative consequences for people with whom we don’t necessarily come in contact. Adelson da Silva, an indigenous leader from the Javari Valley in Brazil traveled 10 days to speak to the group of the plight of his community and of other “relatives of the forest”… the uncontacted tribes, or isolated people—now struggling to stay alive in the Amazon. He stated “We no longer have clean air, we’re sick…” Air is polluted, the water is polluted, the fish are dying. We face this big problem, and we will suffer the consequences. You, too, belong to the Amazon.

The Amazon is often called the “lungs of the earth,” because it absorbs carbon dioxide and converts it into oxygen that we breathe. Though Adelson’s community and others who live in the rainforests may be the first ones to experience the negative consequences of deforestation, climate change and dwindling resources, no amount of money or power will be able to help the earth’s “thirst” and the disasters that humanity will experience. He implored Catholics to “defend” and “fight for the Javari Valley he calls home.”

The gift of married love

By Suzanne Pietropaoli
Diocesan NFP director

On their wedding day, couples are asked to affirm that they have come together freely, to commit themselves to one another for life, and to accept children lovingly from God.

“These are different ways of asking the same basic question: Are you ready to accept this person, and all that may come from your union, completely and forever?” (Married Love and the Gift of Life, 2)

Married love is unique. In “Married Love and the Gift of Life” (p. 5), the U.S. bishops Write:

“By its nature, the love of husband and wife is so complete, so ordered to a lifetime of communion with God and each other, that it is open to creating a new human being they will love and care for together. Part of God’s gift to husband and wife is this ability in and through their love to cooperate with God’s creative power. Therefore, the mutual gift of fertility is an integral part of the bonding of marital intercourse. That power to create a new life with God is at the heart of what spouses share with each other.

However, “When married couples deliberately act to suppress fertility, sexual intercourse is no longer fully marital intercourse. It is something less powerful and intimate, something more ‘casual.’ Suppressing fertility by using contraception denies part of the inherent meaning of married sexuality and does harm to the couple’s unity. The total giving of oneself, body and soul, to one’s beloved is no time to say: ‘I give you everything I am—except...’”

The Church’s teaching is not only about observing a rule, but about preserving that total, mutual gift of two persons in its integrity.

Natural methods

Natural methods empower couples to plan their families while honoring the promises they made to one another before God.

While contraception/sterilization deliberately exclude fertility from the total gift they have promised, couples using Natural Family Planning include fertility as an essential part of their mutual gift of themselves.

Such couples believe that they are “wonderfully made” (Psalm 139). They know that God’s plan is good, and that he did not make mistakes in designing them.

Understanding that design is at the heart of Natural Family Planning: couples learn to identify and interpret the physical signs of fertility, which empowers them to know when they are fertile and when they are not. If they are avoiding pregnancy, they abstain during the fertile time; this knowledge can also be used to achieve pregnancy according to the couple’s intention. Properly understood and applied, NFP is as effective as the Pill, but is entirely free of its side effects.

More than family planning

Yet NFP is far more than a highly effective means of family planning, as Fletcher Doyle shows in Natural Family Planning Blessed our Marriage: 19 True Stories. “NFP brought about a profound change in the way I look at my wife... She became even more beautiful to me. Now, more than ever before, I had to consider her in her entirety as a person and avoid the trap of thinking of her as someone to take care of my needs. My life with my wife became more an act of giving than of taking. My appreciation for what I had in life increased exponentially, and I became fully aware of my blessings. This has brought me great peace. God really does know best.”

His wife Tracy agrees, “I am now able to see God’s hand in everything. With NFP, I don’t have to say one thing and live another. The total surrender of my fertility to God has allowed me to surrender in other areas of my life as well. I feel at peace with my faith and with my sexuality, and I am happier than I have ever been.”

Another of the “19 True Stories” is told by Michael and Lauri Hahn, who started to rethink their Pill use when they had their first child baptized.

“When you promise to bring your child up in the faith, I thought, ‘What am I promising here?’ One question led to another; eventually they decided to learn NFP.

Says Michael, “One of the biggest benefits of NFP has been the impact on our relationship, because conversation about the method opens us up. It becomes a conduit to a better relationship. We learned more about each other’s fears and feelings, more so than when Lauri would just take a Pill every day.”

For Lauri, “The spiritual growth I have had these past few years, and the stronger relationship with Mike, have convinced me that NFP is one of the best things we could have done for our marriage.”

“The great strength of NFP,” concludes Doyle, “is that it requires a spouse to focus on what’s best for the other and not on his/her own wants. And spouses do this in the most intimate aspect of their married lives... Natural Family Planning isn’t a cure-all for the problems that plague couples. However, many couples attest that NFP promotes communication, commitment, mutual respect, faith in God and sexual compatibility. When it comes to a successful marriage, that’s a pretty good place to start.”

The Holy Father offers a message about marriage

Young people need well-formed consciences

By Carol Glatz
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) - The Catholic Church must dedicate itself to properly forming and safeguarding the conscience of its faithful, especially young people so they can see God’s plan for the sacrament of marriage as a great joy for the church and all of humanity, Pope Francis said.

The recent synods on marriage and the family, as well as the apostolic exhortation on the family, “Amoris Laetitia,” were focused on “how to save young people from the uproar and deafening noise of the ephemeral, which leads them to reject taking on stable and positive commitments for the individual and collective good,” the pope said.

In a speech Jan. 29 to members of the Tribunal of the Roman Rota, which mainly deals with appeals filed in marriage annulment cases, the pope examined the central role conscience plays in the process of discerning the nullity or validity of the bond of marriage.

“The conscience takes on a decisive role in the demanding decisions engaged couples must face in accepting and building a conjugal union and family according to God’s plan,” he said.

That means all those involved in pastoral programs or ministry for marriage and the family need to dedicate themselves with renewed concern to helping engaged couples build and safeguard “the inner sanctuary of their Christian conscience.”

It is critical, the pope said, to help young people have a continuous experience of faith, hope and charity, so that they can recognize, “with a sure conscience, that the conjugal union, open to the gift of children, is a great joy for God, the church and humanity.”

The conscience is that inner space “that only God enlightens and opens to life, if people let him in,” the pope said.

Pastoral activity dedicated to “the recovery, the protection and the care of a Christian conscience, enlightened by Gospel values,” he said, is “so priceless and urgent” right now.

It is a long and difficult task that must involve bishops and priests who “tirelessly work for enlightening, defending and upholding the Christian conscience of our people.”

The synods and exhortation made a key point, he said, about the “necessary relationship between the ‘regula fidei’ (rule of faith), that is, the church’s faithfulness to the magisterium that must not be touched, as it is in regards to the Eucharist, and the urgent attention of the church to the psychological and religious processes of all people,” who are called to choose a life of marriage, he said.

As discussed at the synods, a marriage catechumenate would be indispensable for reawakening the Christian conscience of young people and couples, he said. Fostering a lifelong, consistent formation, like with a “permanent catechumenate,” would be necessary so the conscience of every baptized Catholic always be open to “the light of the Holy Spirit.”

In this sense, the union of marriage “can be called true only if the human intention of the spouses is oriented toward that which Christ and the church wants,” he said. Guiding couples so they will be aware of this will require the work of all church leaders, religious and the lay faithful, he said.

WALKING STATIONS OF THE CROSS

The Confirmation II Class from St. Peter’s, St. Hedwig’s, and St. Mary’s Lowville, participated in a “Walking Stations of the Cross” at the Maple Ridge Center, Lowville. Some of the students read the Scriptures at the Stations; all composed their own intentions for a Station. A hot dog roast and conversation with Father Jay Seymour, pastor, was enjoyed by all. Pictured are Kali Foster, Kiley Zicari, Golden Pike, Kelsey Beyer, Kyla Reed, Kassandra Shackelford, Madison Houppert, Mikayla VanNest, Cole Reed, Deb Mullin, Father Jay Seymour, Ariel Wener, Hayden Beyer, Danny Faye, Bobby Farney, Amy Beyer, Randy Helser and Sam Beyer.

Diocese of Ogdensburg Family Life Office
Helping to build strong families with programs and activities that strengthen family life.

The Department of Family Life, in conjunction with the Offices of Vocations and Evangelization, will present day-long workshop on Marriage and Family Life. Our Keynote speakers will be Dr. Gregory and Lisa Popcak. This conference aims to build up marriage and family life in the North Country and help married couples and those thinking of marriage understand the importance of the vocation of marriage as a path to holiness for themselves, their spouse and their children. The family is the basic building block of society, and as such, strengthening family life through strong and resilient marriages, helps build up a culture of love and stability.

In this Jubilee Year of Mercy, Pope Francis has called each of us to be a witness of charity. He encourages us to "open our eyes and see the misery of the world, the wounds of our brothers and sisters who are denied their dignity, and let us recognize that we are compelled to heed their cry for help!"
(Misericordiae Vultus [MV], no. 15).

The Peter's Pence Collection unites us in solidarity to the Holy See and its works of charity to those in need. Your generosity allows the Pope to respond to our suffering brothers and sisters.

The purpose of the Peter's Pence Collection is to provide the Holy Father with the financial means to respond to those who are suffering as a result of war, oppression, natural disaster, and disease.

Cardinal speaks up for immigrants

By Rhina Guidos
Catholic News Service

WASHINGTON (CNS) - Leading with a story about his Irish grandmother who made Boston her home after leaving Country Kerry, Ireland, New Jersey Cardinal Joseph W. Tobin urged Americans, in a Feb. 21 opinion piece in the online publication The Hill, to remember their family's immigrant roots.

He also voiced disappointment at attacks against immigrants lobbed by politicians and others who call themselves Christian.

"Over the past year, the level of vitriol directed to undocumented families has been astonishing," he wrote.

"Elected officials proclaim their hard-line stance on immigration as a badge of honor, even as some proclaim to be people of faith."

To lawmakers "who follow the Judeo-Christian tradition," he reminded them "of the millennial prohibition against persecuting the stranger as well as the fact that Jesus and his family were refugees."

He also took issue with those who use the words "chain migration," which groups such as the American Immigration Lawyers Association have called a "pejorative" term and a "misleading nativist buzzword" to describe "family-based migration."

"There is nothing more hurtful to describe the human migration experience and its importance to society than to use a term such as 'chain migration,'" wrote the cardinal, who heads the Newark Archdiocese.

With disparaging words and actions, "we are witnessing an escalating display of hatred for undocumented individuals and families. We have stopped seeing the faces of our immigrant brothers and sisters, and the stories behind their faces," the cardinal wrote.

He reminded Americans that the number of family-based immigrants admitted to the U.S. each year "is not unchecked - it is limited by Congress. Due to congressional limits on migration, very rarely do family members who wish to come to the U.S. have the ability to simply apply for and receive a visa in a reasonable time period," he said.

Families wait for years and sometimes decades before being reunited with loved ones. And much like his family, they come seeking better lives, not intent on harming others.

Especially painful, he said, was watching the debate involving young adults who were brought to the U.S. as minors without proper documentation and who are often referred to as 'Dreamers.'

"It pains me to see the acrimonious debate involving undocumented youth," he said. "They were brought to this country as children, and now they're being forced to leave to score political points. We use the broad category of 'Dreamers,' but we should remove the statistics and highlight the faces and stories of those impacted by what can be perceived as open season on immigrants," he said.

Highlight the upcoming March 5 deadline Trump gave Congress to find a legislative solution that would help the young adults, the youth are "being portrayed in the media as pawns in a larger game," he said.

"It is clear we're a country that refuses to look at our own immigrant experience. But as a leader within the Catholic Church, I am compelled to speak up," he wrote. "My message to Congress and Americans who have forgotten their own immigrant story is simple: Look again and truly 'see' Dreamers, and then act in the best traditions of our history and of our faith."
Pope to young people: Take the World Youth Day challenge

By Carol Glatz
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) -- It’s time to break free from fear, fake online personas and looking at the world through a digital screen display, Pope Francis told young people.

"Do not allow the spark of youth to be extinguished in the darkness of a closed room in which the only window to the outside world is a computer and smartphone," the pope told youths in his annual message for local celebrations of World Youth Day.

"Open wide the doors of your life! May your time and space be filled with meaningful relationships, real people with whom to share your authentic and concrete experiences of daily life," he said in the message, published Feb. 22 at the Vatican.

In preparation for the next international celebration of World Youth Day - which will be held in Panama Jan. 22-27, 2019 - many dioceses will have their own celebrations Palm Sunday, March 25.

The Panama gathering will focus on Mary’s response to the angel Gabriel’s announcement that God had chosen her to bear the child Jesus: "Behold, I am the handmaid of the Lord. May it be done to me according to your word." The 2018 theme chosen by Pope Francis is the angel’s reassurance, "Do not be afraid, Mary, for you have found favor with God."

Many young people today are afraid -- afraid of never being accepted, of finding a good job and even of their real selves, the pope said in his message.

"Today, there are many young people who feel the need to be different from who they really are, in an attempt to adapt to an often artificial and unattainable standard," he wrote. "They continuously ‘photo-shop’ their images, hiding behind masks and false identities, almost becoming fake selves."

This sense of inadequacy is the root of many uncertainties and even obsessions, such as "receiving as many ‘likes’ as possible" on social media, he added.

No one is exempt from doubt or fear, which even can be seen in the Bible in the lives of Mary, Moses, Abraham, the apostles and many others, he said. In fact, he added, the biggest obstacle to faith in God is often fear, not skepticism.

"The only way forward is to face one’s fears head on, identify them clearly and come to terms with them, he said, "so as not to find yourself wasting time and energy by being gripped by empty and faceless ghosts." People have to act, which requires faith in God and his grace, otherwise fear and doubt will make people become inward-looking and closed off to defend ourselves from everything and everyone, and we will remain paralyzed," he said.

The pope told young people to look for God in prayerful silence and the sacraments so they could draw on the needed courage, wisdom and grace, and to turn to members of the church for encouragement and support.

God is always there to help everybody, he said. He does not ask people to present a stellar resume of their lives, "full of merits and successes."

Receiving God’s grace will not mean life’s problems will disappear, he said, "but it does have the power to transform our life deeply."

"The unknown that tomorrow holds for us is not a dark threat we need to overcome, but a favorable time given to us for living out the uniqueness of our personal vocations and for sharing it with our brothers and sisters in the church and in the world," he said.

Being with others on life’s journey is always key, he said, because it helps unlock one’s own gifts, inspires dreams and opens new horizons.

"Never lose the enthusiasm of enjoying others’ company and friendship, as well as the pleasure of dreaming together, of walking together," he said.

That is why it is so important young people break out of the "darkness of closed room" and the virtual world so as to experience meaningful relationships with real people, he said.
Lent: time to bring faith into the public square

Our readings for this Sunday are heavy with righteous anger, calling us to justice.

In the first reading, we have Moses coming down the mountain bearing the ten commandments of a new covenant. They had been fused in fire and smoke on two stone tablets. As you recall, Moses broke those tablets in his anger when he found the people worshipping a golden calf! Only when he had “cooled down”, and the people had repented, did he make two more tablets, writing down God’s words from memory.

The first three commandments told the people that there is only one God, and Him alone should they worship every seventh day. If they were faithful to God, then the other seven commandments, commanding right relationships with their neighbor, would be easy. Just as Moses had displayed righteous anger because of the people’s injustice, so we witness the righteous anger of Jesus toward their lack of respect for His Father’s house. What a scene he creates, overturning tables, driving people and animals helter-skelter in all directions! Once he has “cleaned house”, He himself takes possession of the temple, and begins to teach the people. Of course, the Pharisees object at once, demanding a sign that he has authority to do these things.

What a sign he gave! “Destroy this temple (meaning His Body), and I will rebuild it in three days”. Only when he broke through the rock of His tomb on Easter Sunday, did even his apostles understand what he meant.

There is a place for “righteous anger” in this year’s Lenten journey.

An inspiring pope.... man of joy.... future saint

By Cindy Wooden
Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) - While Pope Francis thinks Blessed Paul VI wrote “the greatest pastoral document that has ever been written,” great writing does not make a pope a saint.

A saint is a person who has lived a holy life to an extraordinary degree. The Catholic Church officially has recognized thousands of women and men as saints, and it honors millions more, unnamed and unnoticed, on All Saints Day each November.

Pope Francis said in mid-February that he would add Blessed Paul VI to the host of formally proclaimed saints this year.

Particularly after the death of St. John Paul II, the pastoral wisdom of canonizing popes has been the object of debate. After all, one reason for so publicly and formally recognizing a person as a saint is to provide modern Catholics with models to imitate in their own striving for holy living, and the life of a pope is not exactly that of an average Catholic.

But the Catholic Church also canonizes certain women and men to highlight specific Christian virtues at a specific time.

For example, while it obviously was not the only reason, the canonization of St. John Paul II in 2014 - just nine years after his death - could be seen as affirming before the world the dignity and value of human life even when it is obviously fragile. And the canonization of St. Teresa of Kolkata in 2016, during the Year of Mercy, highlighted how receiving God’s mercy should lead to sharing it with others, particularly in concrete works of mercy.

Pope Francis often speaks of Pope Paul VI’s influence on him

That Pope Francis has a similar point to make about Pope Paul VI, who led the church from 1963 to 1978, can be seen in comments he has made about his predecessor throughout the five years of his own papacy.

The remarks go well beyond his repeated praise for “the greatest pastoral document that has ever been written,” a reference to “Evangelii Nuntiandi,” the 1975 apostolic exhortation on evangelization in the modern world. Pope Francis’ own “Evangelii Gaudium” ("The Joy of the Gospel") pays tribute to it, not just in its title, but in its whole focus on the obligation of every Christian to “go out,” joyfully sharing the faith with others.

Asked by Catholic News Service about the commonalities between Pope Francis and Blessed Paul, Father Carlos Maria Galli, dean of the faculty of theology at the Catholic University of Argentina, sent a 29-page essay he wrote on the topic. The central point of contact, he said, is “the communion of both with the Good Shepherd and on the mission of communicating the joy of Christ.”

Father Galli identified a long list of commonalities, including: their devotion to the Scriptures and the Eucharist; sensitivity to modern cultures; commitment to the reforms of the Second Vatican Council; “a great ecumenical heart” and commitment to interreligious dialogue; and, “above all, a life shaped by pastoral charity.”

For both, he said, a bishop or priest must be “a shepherd who goes before, beside and behind the flock entrusted to them.”

Members of the flock, however, can and do disagree with their shepherd. The very public criticism of both popes is another thing the two share. For Pope Paul VI, the criticism honed in on the Second Vatican Council and, especially, on “Humanae Vitae,” his 1968 encyclical on married love that included a reaffirmation of church teaching against artificial contraception.

For Pope Francis, it’s a pastoral style that seems to downplay rules and regulations; that is particularly true with the question of Communion for divorced and civilly remarried Catholics. “After Humanae Vitae,” many difficulties and misunderstandings emerged that were the result of all of the tension accumulated in the first years after the council,” said Msgr. Gilfredo Marengo, a professor of theological anthropology at Rome’s Pontifical John Paul II Institute for Studies on Marriage and Family and leader of a group of scholars researching how and why Pope Paul wrote the encyclical.

Paul VI was well aware of the upheaval and “suffered greatly because of it,” Msgr. Marengo

GAME NIGHT

By John Mulderig
Catholic News Service

Family values and much enjoyable humor are offset by numerous distasteful jokes and an excess of vulgar language in the comedy "Game Night" (Warner Bros.).

The ensemble's placid evenings of fun are suddenly shaken up by the arrival in town of Max's suave, domineering brother, Brooks (Kyle Chandler), a highly successful businessman of whom Max has always been jealous.

In lieu of Risk or charades, Brooks arranges for something closer to a murder mystery party: a fake kidnapping that Max, Annie and their friends will have to vie with each other to solve.

As the audience realizes before the characters do, however, something all-too-authentically criminal soon begins to unfold amid the entertainment.

Though the film's premise rests on an unlikely coincidence, some of the comedy it facilitates definitely works. Plemons, for instance, is hilarious as the awkward, vaguely sinister Gary.

Less welcome is the fact that the often-wayward humor includes a few sight gags that are quite gory.

Despite its tendency to stray, though, screenwriter Mark Perez's script does promote a positive view of marriage and parenthood.

Additionally, Brooks' materialistic lifestyle is shown in a negative light while Ryan's taste for the company of bimbos is challenged when he invites brainy co-worker Sarah (Sharon Horgan) to join him on the fateful night and, despite themselves, they begin to fall for each other.

Though bedroom jokes and a surfeit of cuss words make it far too gamy for kids -- as well as for most of their elders -- such redeeming factors keep the movie from being deemed inappropriate fare for anyone.

The film contains much sexual humor, more than a dozen uses of profanity and several milder oaths and pervasive rough and crude language.

told CNS. "Evangelii Nunciandi" was his attempt to close a problematic season in the life of the church - a season in which opposition to 'Humanae Vitae' was just the most noticeable sign - and set the church again on the path of mission and evangelization."

In "Amoris Laetitia," his document on the family, Pope Francis cites "Humanae Vitae" as Pope Paul VI's contribution to church teaching on marriage and family life.

The fact that Pope Francis quotes the document "excludes any formal distancing by Francis from this part of the magisterium of Paul VI," Msgr. Marengo said, apparently responding to persistent rumors among a small group of Catholics that Pope Francis, with Msgr. Marengo's help, was preparing to "lift the ban" on artificial birth control.

Speaking to a group of pilgrims from Brescia, Italy, Pope Francis noted that even in the face of "a secularized and hostile society," Pope Paul "could hold fast, with farsightedness and wisdom - and at times alone - to the helm of the Council: the lights, the hopes, the tensions. He loved the church and expended himself for her, holding nothing back."

And, beatifying Pope Paul in 2014, Pope Francis noted that even in the face of "a secularized and hostile society," Pope Paul "could hold fast, with farsightedness and wisdom - and at times alone - to the helm of the barque of Peter while never losing his joy and his trust in the Lord."

Pope Francis referred to him as "this great pope, this courageous Christian, this tireless apostle," who demonstrated a "humble and prophetic witness of love for Christ and his church."

Those are qualities that make a saint.

Loving connection

Paul Martin of Connecticut and Veronica Sanchez of Peru, South America were married in 2008. They received the Sacrament of Matrimony following a relationship that began in Mollendo, Peru.

In May 2003, I was invited by Father George Maroun, then Director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, to celebrate the 40th Anniversary of St. Martin de Porras Parish in Mollendo, Peru. The Peruvians were happy to see their former pastor, Father Maroun, and other diocesan priests who traveled to Mollendo for the celebration.

The Peruvians warmly welcomed us with dancing and native food. One young lady, Veronica, was telling me about herself and hoping to learn some English while I was venturing to understand some Spanish.

Veronica invited Paul Martin into the conversation. Paul became very interested in Veronica’s story. Likewise, Veronica wanted to know something about Paul. She quickly asked, “Is Paul a priest?” I assured her that he wasn’t; he was the great nephew of Father Roger Martin who was one of the first priests from the diocese to serve in Mollendo.

The brief introduction led to Veronica and Paul “Samba Dancing” the night away.

Paul returned to the USA and time passed each hoping that they would receive a letter from the other. Finally, Veronica wrote to Paul and the correspondence continued through letters, emails and the sharing of family pictures. Paul visited Veronica in Mollendo several times.

Never doubting their love for each other, there were mixed feelings about marriage for them with the distance between North America and South America, the language barrier and the cultural differences. Over time the relationship grew into plans for marriage with blessings from their parents.

Loving

Paul Rocker

Recently reflecting upon their ten year marriage, Veronica and Paul attest to their love for each other. They are forever grateful that God brought them together through Father Maroun’s invitation to Paul to join the mission trip.

They now know the value of corresponding over a period of time considering the cultural challenges that were ahead of them. They have two children, Valerie, eight years old and Paul, Jr. seven years old who are growing and learning to live in complementing different cultures.

They admit that for them speaking two different languages, communication can be a challenge. They have had to learn different ways to see life and understand and solve problems. That challenge is not always easy.

Paul and Veronica do know and speak openly that the faith and love that God has put in their hearts is what they have in common and that is what brings hope and happiness into their marriage.

We know that every couple has a story of how they met. We trust that through the Sacrament of Matrimony, that God who truly brought them together will be their source of strength in sorrows and joys.

Please remember “The Society for the Propagation of the Faith” when writing or changing your Will.
