Bishop clarifies stance on victims act

Bishop Terry R. LaValley would like to set the record straight on his position on the Child Victims Act.

“There is a lot of misunderstanding about where the New York State bishops stand on the various versions of the Child Victims Act,” said Bishop LaValley. “Over the last decade, the New York State Catholic Conference, which represents the bishops of New York, worked with politicians on both sides of the aisle to propose the elimination of the criminal statute of limitations for the sexual abuse of minors.”

Marching for life

Diocese of Ogdensburg youth Isabella Rondon, Makayla Weber, Grace Aubertine, Theresa VanWormer, Tori Mallette, Olivia Acostamadiedo, Shacoria Jackson and Malia Byard were among the over 100,000 who attended the March for Life in Washington, DC on Friday.

Pope: Lord's Prayer is reaching out for love

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — To pray well, people need to have the heart of a child — a child who feels safe and loved in a father’s tender embrace, Pope Francis said.

If people have become estranged from God, feel lonely, abandoned or have realized their mistakes and are paralyzed by guilt, “we can still find the strength to pray” by starting with the word, “Father,” pronounced with the tenderness of a child, he said.

No matter what problems or feelings a person is experiencing or the mistakes someone has made, God “will not hide his face. He will not close himself up in silence. Say, ‘Father,’ and he will answer,” the pope said Jan. 16 during his weekly general audience.

After greeting the thousands of faithful gathered in the Paul VI audience hall, the pope continued his series of talks on the Lord’s Prayer, reflecting on the Aramaic term, “Abba,” which Jesus uses to address God, the father.

“It is rare Aramaic expressions do not to get translated into Greek in the New Testament,” which shows how special, important and nuanced “Abba” is in reflecting the radical and new relationship God has with his people, the pope said.

St. Paul, he said, wrote to the Romans that they were now “children of God, for you did not receive a spirit of slavery to fall back into fear, but you received a spirit of adoption, through which we cry, ‘Abba, Father!’”

Jesus teaches his disciples that “Christians can no longer consider God a tyrant to be feared,” but instead feel a sense of trust growing in their hearts in which they can “speak to the creator, calling him ‘Father,’” the pope said.

The term "Abba," the pope said, "is something much more intimate and moving that simply calling God, ‘father,’” It is an endearing term, somewhat like “dad,” “daddy” or “papa.”

Even though the Lord’s Prayer has been translated using the more formal term, “Father,” “we are invited to say, ‘papa,’ to have a rapport with God like a child with his or her papa.”

Whatever term used, it is meant to inspire and foster a feeling of love and warmth, he said, like a child would feel in the full embrace of a tender father.
EDITOR'S NOTE

It’s brave to stand against a culture

I was a young child, probably 6 or 7, when my paternal grandmother took my sisters and I—three girls within a two-year age range (I’m a twin, our sister is two years older than us) — to the March for Life in the nation’s capital.

My grandmother was either brave or crazy to travel on a bus with three young girls for ten hours and try to monitor our movements in a crowd of that size.

If she was crazy, I’d like to think she was the best kind of crazy.

I hadn’t thought about that experience in years. I thought of it this week as I saw the youth, young adults, chaplains and chaperones from our diocese posting photos and videos of their March for Life experience on social media Friday and Saturday.

Our diocesan marchers, as well as those from around the nation who gathered in Washington, DC, and in cities, villages and towns around the U.S., united their voices on behalf of those who have no voice to seek an end to the killing of innocents. They did this amid a culture that has embraced that killing and suggests they’re anti-woman or anti-choice. They did this as our own state is likely to allow more health practitioners to provide abortions and remove restrictions on late-term abortions.

Like my grandmother, these marchers are the best kind of crazy. It takes boldness and bravery to speak against a culture.

We have an opportunity to add our voices to theirs by showing support for the Respect Life collection this weekend. Our support helps youth and young adults attend the march, and it helps fund Gabriel Projects and other efforts to support life around the diocese.

Sacraments bring us blessing, support

Our Catholic Church liturgical year ended the Christmas Season with the celebration of the meaningful feast in honor of the Baptism of the Lord. On that Sunday, the Gospel reading reminded us of the words of John the Baptist, who said Jesus would come with Baptism of the Holy Spirit and fire, and that all who received this Baptism of Jesus must live well as baptized people.

This Sunday is a celebration of the Baptism that all Catholics receive.

On this year’s Feast of the Baptism of the Lord, I watched a television coverage of Pope Francis leading a Mass and a celebration of Baptism. On that day, he baptized nearly one hundred babies in the Sistine Chapel. It was certainly his way of highlighting the importance of the Sacrament of Baptism.

St. John the Baptist pointed out Jesus as our Messiah who will baptize in the Holy Spirit and fire. Baptism blesses and celebrates a new birth. This is truly being born again in the Lord sacramentally.

Sacraments are the life of our Catholic faith. Through our sacraments, we are united in love and faith with our God at each moment of life. The sacraments of our church bring blessing and support to our life as disciples of Jesus. Let us take a moment to remember our other sacraments.

Confirmation: our sacrament that celebrates our decision to live well as disciples of Jesus. In Confirmation, we choose to live as Jesus taught us, and we find support and blessing to meet all of life’s challenges.

Anointing of the Sick: the sacrament that announces Jesus’ presence and healing at the moment of death. Let us take a moment to remember our other sacraments.

Consecration: the sacrament that celebrates God’s forgiving love and helps us to meet God’s challenges so that we can change all that will make our lives what they should be. In this sacrament we find God’s blessing for our times of conversion.

Holy Eucharist: our sacrament that celebrates life—the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus. In the reception of this sacrament, we find new life and love through our union with the Lord, just as Jesus united himself with his apostles at the Last Supper.

Marriage and Ordination: these sacraments bless and support those entering in the vocations of marriage and priesthood and gives the Lord’s constant support to live out all challenges in these vocations.

Ordination: the sacrament that brings the priest’s blessing and anointing of the blessed oil to support and strengthen with the power of the Lord for all seriously ill, especially those close to death.

Sacramental are special rituals—rich with meaning and sometimes symbolism—to guide us, to teach us and to show us the way, bringing the power and love of our God in a special way into our lives and at every time of life. Each sacrament challenges us to live well as followers of Jesus.

Our sacraments use the things of this world. The primary symbol of Baptism is water—water that celebrates the new life that comes in Baptism and challenges us to recognize our place in creation. Water is the most precious substance on our planet; without water, no life. No other planet has water— and so no life. We are the blessed people in God’s creation. We are the whole show. We are the heart and soul of creation. We are saved—a holiness celebrated in Baptism. Our life must be meaningful; we are baptized.

One other symbol to mention to you in Baptism is the formal presentation of a person’s name. That name, that gift from our parents, separates us completely from all other people. I want to share with you a story that seems to fit in here. This is a fifty-year-old story for me. I have been telling this story ever since it happened. I was a young priest standing on the steps of St. Andrew’s Church here in town, and a young boy (one wonder where he is now) came riding by on his bike. I shouted, “Hi, Champ.” I remember him looking back at me and he said, “My name is John.” He wanted me to realize how special he was.

We are a sacramental church. Our sacraments are our prayers and our life. The sacraments unite us to the Lord through our Catholic Church.
Marchers take to the streets of Plattsburgh for Life

By Shawn Ryan
Contributing Writer

PLATTSBURGH – A hardy handful of the faithful braved temperatures that just barely cracked double digits, taking to the Plattsburgh streets to march in the annual March For Life on Jan. 13.

The marchers left from the Blessed John XXIII Newman Center and traveled wind-swept, ice-covered sidewalks to St. John’s Church, where they met up with dozens more who had come for the annual Benediction in support of the Pro-Life movement.

The event, which featured songs and prayers, was led by Deacon Jack M. Lukasiewicz, Chairman of Champlain Valley Right to Life, at Our Lady of Victory Church.

In his keynote talk, Lukasiewicz focused on the uniqueness of each life, and how that uniqueness starts at day one.

“Pro-life is pro-science,” said Lukasiewicz. “Life begins at fertilization; at day one. These are scientific facts. Our uniqueness and individualities begins at day one.”

Deacon Lukasiewicz went on to explain why he’s so passionate about the issue.

“There have been 60 million unborn babies since Roe versus Wade; 60 million songs of love and life that will never be sung. We were made to be fruitful and multiply. Instead we subtract, divide and fractionalize. That is why I March for Life. I’ve made this my mission.”

After the Benediction and closing song led by the St. John’s Choir, those in attendance met at the parish center for refreshments, and a much-needed reprieve before heading back out to brave the frigid North Country weather once again.
Bishop clarifies position on victims act

Bishop Terry R. LaValley would like to set the record straight on his position on the Child Victims Act. "There is a lot of misunderstanding about where the New York State bishops stand on the various versions of the Child Victims Act," said Bishop LaValley. "Over the last decade, the New York State Catholic Conference, which represents the bishops of New York, worked with politicians on both sides of the aisle to propose the elimination of the criminal statute of limitations for the sexual abuse of minors. Additionally, we bishops have supported raising the statute of limitations for civil lawsuits in cases involving the sexual abuse of a minor," said Bishop LaValley.

"The widely reported notion that the Catholic Church has opposed all provisions contained in the various versions of the Victim's Act is simply not accurate," said Bishop LaValley. Recently Cardinal Timothy Dolan wrote about the Child Victims Act in an op-ed piece in the Daily News. He noted that the New York bishops feel it is important to make the Child Victims Act focus on healing and helping survivors of child sexual abuse. Elimination of the criminal statutes of limitations and the conditions precedent of notices of claim for civil claims against public entities are a big step in helping survivors, and the bishops have supported and continue to support these measures. The bishops have also supported requiring background checks and safe environment training as part of the Act. "We are doing these things in the Church already," said Bishop LaValley.

It is true, there have been some provisions in the proposed legislation that the bishop's have opposed. The first is the inclusion of a "window" that would revive claims that are currently barred by the statute of limitations. Opposition to the revival of claims has been based on the fact that after the passage of time it can be difficult or impossible for an institution that employed an accused abuser to get to the truth, and it is hard to achieve justice in such circumstances. "Litigation is not easy on the survivors or the accuses, especially after the passage of decades," said Bishop LaValley. "The eight dioceses of New York have all undertaken reconciliation and compensation programs to help victims heal." State-wide, these programs have paid out more than $200 million dollars to more than 1,000 victims, with some cases going back 60 years. "The compensation programs have worked well," said Bishop LaValley. "In our diocese we had 39 victims participate and all of them accepted the compensation offered. Many reported that the program brought them healing and peace. The programs were not adversarial like litigation is. It is a much better approach."

The bishops also opposed the fact that most proposed versions of the Child Victims Act do not include all victims. This remains the case. "If the law is going to include a window to revive claims, it should revive all claims," Bishop LaValley explained. The bishops point out that under Gov. Cuomo's current proposal, lifting the statute of limitations will allow time barred claims to be brought against private organizations, but not against public or government organizations. "The proposed legislation we have seen in the past did not retroactively remove the requirement of a notice of claim. Under those circumstances, a victim abused by a teacher in a private school could bring a claim, but a student abused by a teacher in a public school could not," said Bishop LaValley. "We have to ensure that any legislation provides equal justice for all victims."

"Child sexual abuse is a terrible crime. The bishops of New York have taken great steps to eliminate this evil from the Church over the past 20 years, and we have seen documented success," said Bishop LaValley. "We have reached out to victims to offer healing and compensation. We will support any legislation that protects young people, gives them justice, and includes all victims."

N.Y. bishops express sadness over abortion bill

ALBANY, N.Y. (CNS) -- A proposed abortion law for New York state that would allow more health practitioners to provide abortion and remove all state restrictions on late-term abortions "is not progress" as lawmakers argue, said New York's Catholic bishops.

"The so-called 'Reproductive Health Act' will expand our state's already radically permissive law," they said in a statement released Jan. 17. "With an abortion rate that is already double the national average, New York law is moving in the wrong direction."

They said "words are insufficient to describe the profound sadness we feel at the contemplated passage of the measure. "We mourn the unborn infants who will lose their lives, and the many mothers and fathers who will suffer remorse and heartbeat as a result," they said.

"We renew our pledge to offer the resources and services of our charitable agencies and health services to any woman experiencing an unplanned pregnancy, to support her in bearing her infant, raising her family or placing her child for adoption," the bishops said. "There are life-affirming choices available, and we aim to make them more widely known and accessible."

The Albany-based New York State Catholic Conference, which is the public policy arm of the bishops, released the statement on behalf of: Cardinal Timothy M. Dolan of New York; Bishop Edward B. Scharfenberger of Albany; Bishop Nicholas DiMarzio of Brooklyn; Bishop Richard J. Malone of Buffalo; Bishop Terry R. LaValley of Ogdensburg; Bishop Salvatore R. Matano of Rochester; Bishop John O. Barres of Rockville Centre; Bishop Robert J. Cunningham of Syracuse; and the state's auxiliary and retired bishops.

New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo, who is Catholic, and legislative leaders "hail this new abortion law as progress. This is not progress," the bishops said. "Progress will be achieved when our laws and our culture once again value and respect each unrepeatable gift of human life, from the first moment of creation to natural death. Would that not make us truly the most enlightened and progressive state in the nation?"

Introduced in the Legislature the week of Jan. 7, the Reproductive Health Act, or RHA, is known as S. 240 in the state Senate and A. 21 in the state Assembly. It is expected to pass within the first 30 days of the legislative session, as promised by Cuomo.

Dennis Poust, director of communications for the New York State Catholic Conference, said the numbers needed to prevent the bill from passing "just aren't there."

"The Assembly is overwhelmingly Democrat, and the governor is the one who has been proposing it. (Senate Democrats) ran on this and were swept into office, so they're not going to pass it," he told The Evangelist, Albany's diocesan newspaper, in a recent interview.
Support the Respect Life Collection of the Diocese of Ogdensburg in our parishes the weekend of January 26-27

Proceeds will be distributed through grants to various North Country parishes, organizations, and programs for the support of a variety of respect life initiatives.

Thank you for your generosity toward this most special need. Please continue to pray that all will recognize, honor and protect the precious gift of life.

Vatican City (CNS) – The Vatican has created a set of pastoral guidelines to inspire and improve the church’s work in addressing the crime of human trafficking and the care of its victims worldwide.

The Migrants and Refugees Section of the Dicastery for Promoting Integral Human Development released its “Pastoral Orientations on Human Trafficking” Jan. 17 at a Vatican news conference.

“Pope Francis’ consistent teaching on human trafficking provides the foundation for the present pastoral orientations which draw also from the longstanding practical experience of many international Catholic NGOs working in the field and from the observations of representatives of bishops’ conferences,” the text said.

“While approved by the Holy父, the orientations do not pretend to exhaust the church’s teaching on human trafficking; rather, they provide a series of key considerations that may be useful to Catholics and others in their pastoral ministry, in planning and practical engagement, in advocacy and dialogue,” it said.

The Migrants and Refugees Section also released a separate publication, “Lights on the Ways of Hope,” which compiles Pope Francis’ teachings on migrants, refugees and human trafficking.

“Its purpose is similar to that of the ‘Compendium of the Social Doctrine of the Church,’ to serve one and all as an instrument for the moral and pastoral discernment of the complex events” concerning the movements of people today, and as “a guide to inspire” people to look to the future with hope, the book’s introduction said.

The nearly 500-page volume collects more than 300 complete or excerpted speeches, messages and reflections by the pope on the three themes.

Additionally, the collection is available online at https://migrants-refugees.va/resource-center/collection/ with a robust search engine to help people who are looking to study more in-depth what the pope has said.

Diverse crowd gathers at DC march to defend life

WASHINGTON (CNS) — The ritual sights of the annual March for Life never seem to change.

Tens of thousands congregate on the National Mall on a brisk winter morning. Many of them have arrived after hours on the road as part of bus caravans.

They listen to speeches and then march up to the U.S. Supreme Court to mark the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision that legalized abortion nationwide.

The speeches and the marchers each year call for respect for all life and an end to abortion, but there’s nothing monolithic about the marchers. In fact, there’s great texture there and a diversity of faith traditions.

Alexander Kvenvolden and wife Aleah, at the march for the second year, had come all the way from Seattle by themselves. Despite the damp chill and the remains of a snowfall on the ground, Alexander was in khaki shorts. “I like shorts all the time,” the software developer explained.

They’d both been active in Students for Life while in college. “I’m also super-stoked about (rally speakers) Ben Shapiro and Abby Johnson (founder of And Then Were None),” Alexander said.

Ahead of his remarks to the rally, Shapiro, a commentator and editor-in-chief of The Daily Wire, did a pre-rally podcast from the stage. He took a call from Vice President Mike Pence to appreciate whoops from the crowd. Later, Pence and his wife, Karen, made a surprise appearance at the rally.

“It’s an extraordinarily important event,” Pence said of the march. “Forty-six years ago this month, the Supreme Court turned (away from) the inalienable right to life.”

He also said he couldn’t be “more proud than to be the vice president of the most pro-life president in history, President Donald Trump.”

Before Pence called in, Shapiro took a question submitted to him online on whether it would have been right to have killed an infant Adolf Hitler, if that alone would have prevented the Holocaust.

“And the truth is,” Shapiro said, “that no pro-life person on earth would kill baby Hitler, because baby Hitler wasn’t Hitler, adult Hitler was Hitler.”

He said instead, the idea would presumably be to move the baby Hitler “into a better house where he would not grow up to be Hitler, right? That’s the idea.”

In the crowd of marchers, Franciscan University in Steubenville, Ohio, was well represented by about 400 students. It was one of the larger groups – they’d had taken a five-hour bus caravan to get to the nation’s capital. Sophomore Abigail Kehoe was marching for the second time.

What brought her back? “The babies,” she replied. She’s part of a group that sometimes prays in front of an abortion clinic in nearby Pittsburgh.

Kent and Karen Powell, were attending for the first year and brought their 8-year-old daughter, Channing. “We’ve seen it happen, but never had a chance to come,” Kent told Catholic News Service. Their church is a member of Charis Fellowship, a network of places of worship formerly known as the Fellowship of Grace Brethren Churches.

The couple used to participate in the annual Life Chain surrounding abortion clinics on the Sunday before the Supreme Court begins its term in October. “It’s the least we can do for life,” Kent said.

Colorado Christian University, an interdenominational institution in Lakewood, Colorado, sent more than 30 marchers.

“It’s just an amazing experience, and I want to put action where my words are,” said recent graduate Kaity Cleveringa, attending the march for her second year. “It’s a good place to start.” She and senior Maddisen Baumann said they volunteer at the Alternative Pregnancy Center in Denver.

The Diocese of Toledo, Ohio, was represented by about 200 marchers. Henry Keller, a homeschooled teen, said: “I’ve always been attracted to this huge group of people who just want to stand up for life. We can get there and spread the word to the world.”

St. Gabriel’s Catholic Church in Midlothian, Virginia, sent 45 people. It was the first year for Mike Clapper.

“You know, going to church and hearing about it, I just decided I’m coming,” he said. “It’s an opportunity to express our beliefs.”

The Dominican House of Studies in Washington was represented by nearly all the 46 students and 23 priests there.

NEW YORK (CNS) — The Arthurian legend gets an inventive updating in "The Kid Who Would Be King" (Fox), a thrilling adventure that casts schoolchildren as latter-day Knights of the Round Table, destined to save the world.

Borrowing heavily from the Harry Potter canon, with a dash of J.R.R. Tolkien and Disney's "The Sword in the Stone" (1963) thrown in, writer-director Joe Cornish serves up that treasured Hollywood rarity: an entertaining, family-friendly film that skillfully blends in strong messages – in this case, about truth, justice and caring for others.

Not to be confused with the 1975 Kipling adaptation "The Man Who Would Be King," this movie is set in modern-day Britain. It's a land wracked by divisions, anxiety and political uncertainty (Brexit, anyone)?

Twelve-year-old Alex (Louis Ashbourne Serkis) has but one goal: to get through the school day without himself or his nerdy best friend, Bedders (Dean Chaumoo), being bullied by classmates. No such luck: after Alex stands up to two toughs, Lance (Tom Taylor) and Kaye (Rhianna Dorris), they give chase, determined to humiliate him.

Alex escapes through a hole in the fence surrounding a building site. There he's amazed to find a shiny sword sticking up in a pile of rubble. He grasps the handle and pulls out the blade, unaware that the mythical Excalibur is now in his grasp, making him the new "king."

Fabled wizard Merlin promptly arrives, a shape-shifter played alternatively as a fellow schoolboy (Angus Imrie) and a grizzled old man (Patrick Stewart). Merlin warns Alex that his success with the storied weapon has awakened the wicked enchantress Morgana le Fay (Rebecca Ferguson) in her subterranean lair – where she was imprisoned eons ago by her half-brother, King Arthur.

In a mere four days, a solar eclipse will offer Morgana the chance to re-enter the world of the living. Alex has little time to assume the crown, recruit knights and raise an army. "I'm supposed to stop that? That's ridiculous – I'm 12!" he tells Merlin.

Destiny will not be ignored, however, and under Merlin's tutelage Alex begins by enlisting Bedders. He also reconciles with his enemies, hoping to benefit from Lance and Kaye's brawn as well as their popularity. It's no surprise that the names of the new band turn out to correspond to those of Arthur's knights: Lance is Sir Lancelot, Kaye is Sir Kay, and Bedders is Sir Bedivere.

Our company of misfits embarks on an epic quest that takes them from London to Stonehenge and on to Arthur's birthplace, the coastal village of Tintagel in Cornwall. Then it's back to school where they must convince the entire student body to don armor and join the battle against Morgana's zombie warriors (whose appearance may frighten younger viewers).

"If we fight together, evil doesn't stand a chance," Alex declares, validating Merlin's observation that "there is an old soul in every child."

The film contains potentially scary fantasy violence and two mild oaths. The Catholic News Service classification is A-II – adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG – parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children.
Sunday readings give message of hope

As we approach the month of February, we must pray earnestly for the leadership of the Catholic Church who will gather in Rome to attack the serious problem of sexual misbehavior on the part of certain bishops and priests. It needs some radical changes. Only the Holy Spirit can bring real trust back to many who have left our houses of worship.

Fortunately, there is a treasure of hope in this Sunday’s readings, beginning with Nehemiah, appointed by King Artaxerxes to rebuild the city of Jerusalem, which lay in ruins following the exile. The spirits of the people also needed rebuilding, so Ezra, the priest, dusts off the neglected scrolls of the law, and calls all the people together, even children who are old enough to understand. From morning to night, Ezra reads to them the Law. Most had neglected its precepts for years. As they hear it read and explained by Ezra, they begin to weep tears of joy and of sorrow.

After recommitting their lives to the Lord, they express their joy with days of feasting. Today’s Gospel describes an even greater reason for hope. As Jesus formally begins his mission on earth, he starts with Capernaum in Galilee. There, in the synagogue on a Sabbath, he reads to the people from the passage in Isaiah which proclaims the coming messianic age.

In a voice filled with the fire of the Spirit, he announces to them Isaiah’s prophecy of a coming messiah who will bring relief to the poor, liberty for captives, recovery of sight to the blind, and freedom for the oppressed.

Then, handing the scroll to an attendant, he proclaims to all present, “Today this Scripture passage is fulfilled in your hearing.” These words are the core of Jesus’ message to both the people of His day and of our times! Talk about a reason to hope!

In today’s second reading from St. Paul to the Corinthians, we find a blueprint for acting on the two readings we have heard. “As a body is one though it has many parts...so also Christ...You are Christ’s Body, and individually parts of it.” St. Paul tells us that some parts are more important than others, but each part depends on the other parts. What a great truth for us to digest! As the poet John Donne wrote centuries ago: “No man is an island!”

Every Knee Shall Bow podcast

The following is the first installment in a blog featured on the Diocese of Ogdenburg Office of Evangelization’s website. The blog will be updated weekly. The North Country Catholic will also run selections from this blog as space allows. To see the online edition, visit https://www.rcdony.org/evangelization/blog.html

By Marika Donders
Director for the Office of the New Evangelization

Every Knee Shall Bow is a new podcast from Ascension Press. This podcast started on Dec. 5 and is a weekly podcast on how to get past the buzzwords of the new evangelization and actually begin evangelizing.

Many of us have been to workshops where we learned the theories about becoming intentional or missionary disciples of Christ with mandates to go out and make disciples, to share our faith, to be Christ Led, Christ Fed and Hope Filled. But practically speaking, how do we actually go about doing these things? Where do we start? What is the first small step, and then the next, and the next ...

This podcast, presented by Michael Gormley and Dave VanVickle, gives you, from their own experience, basic steps you can take each week to spread the gospel where ever you find yourself.

If you find sharing your faith awkward, if you avoid having to answer questions about your faith, if you think you just don’t know enough and want to leave the evangelizing to the “professionals” like priest, nuns and parish staffs, this podcast will give you tools and practical small steps to become a missionary disciple. What I like about this podcast is that it stretches you just a tiny little bit to tip your toe into the water, but never tries to push you beyond where you are ready to go. The first couple of episodes you don’t even have to talk to anyone! And every episode gives you five practical takeaways that you can work on that week.

The first episode “Be Unashamed of the Gospel,” explains what the podcast is all about and introduces the hosts. The second episode helps you prepare your Christian Testimony, then there is an episode that talks about conversion.

The hosts tell stories, some things that worked and some things that didn’t. There was a short Christmas message for the next episode, and the latest episode speaks about the kerygma, or initial proclamation.

Some ideas for how to use this podcast:

Of course, like all podcasts, you can simply listen and learn on your own, but I would recommend finding a friend or two (or three), listening to the podcasts on your own, but then getting together and discussing. Try some of the practical tips and share what you did, and how it worked. I would recommend not just jumping in at the latest episode, but, since this is a brand new podcast with very few past episodes, go back to be beginning of the series.

If you have listened to this podcast, have comments, or have ideas for other resources you would like reviewed, email the Diocesan New Evangelization Office at mdonders@rcdony.org.

Respect life:
it is our mission

May we show by our words and actions that every human life is cherished and chosen;

May we build a culture of life by embracing our mission as messengers of God's love;

No two stanzas have ever summed up the Mission of the Pontifical Mission Societies more concisely.

Respecting all life is a part of us. Take a moment and look around to enjoy God's beauty and remember our Creator. Remember the power of life. Remember why we are here. Remember that all life matters. Remember that sometimes we must all work together to preserve life. It all starts with respect for life.

How privileged we are, through the Pontifical Mission Societies, to be witnesses of the Lord's grace giving forth great fruits in the young mission churches: schools opening, a new diocese, a wing of new students in the seminary, a new mission medical center. In our world of often not-so-good news, we can forget the great works being done in our midst every day. As the Body of Christ, we are connected to those works through a spiritual union, the real union that is the church.

As Christ's body, connected as “one family in mission,” we reach out then to support the growth, the new life in the Missions and help priests, religious and lay catechists bring hope to those in need. By reaching out to support this growth of new life in the Missions, we are showing the world that we respect life.

The Pontifical Mission Societies are recognized as the principal instrument for educating the faithful to an awareness of the church's universal mission and for encouraging their support, in prayer and sacrifice. Respect life. It's easy to do. All life – both here, far, the unborn, the sick and dying. May God bless us all as we honor such a basic precept of respect.

Middle school retreat focuses on vocations

SARANAC LAKE - The rainy fall weather could not dampen the enthusiasm of 116 middle school students from our Catholic schools and parish religious education programs who gathered at Camp Guggenheim for a vocation retreat.

Jointly sponsored by the diocesan youth department and the vocations office, the retreat was an opportunity for the students to ponder the question, “What is God calling me to do?”

The theme for this year’s retreat was from the prophet Jeremiah, “For I know the plans I have for you,” plans to give you hope and a future…”

The day began with active icebreakers and opening prayer, led by diocesan youth director, Tom Semeraro.

After that, Sister Suanne, a Sister of St. Joseph who ministers in Ticonderoga, spoke about how we know what God is calling us to be.

From there, students broke into small groups for workshops that talked about the importance of prayer, recognizing our talents and gifts, and listening to what others say about us.

“One of the nice things about today is that students get to meet students from other schools,” said diocesan Vocations Coordinator Cathy Russell, one of the event’s coordinators. “We split students up, so they can have this opportunity.”

A lunch of pizza, salad, cookies and water was provided with the help of the Diocese of Ogdensburg Vocation Society (DOVS).

After lunch, students were given the opportunity to hear from a variety of people who shared their vocation journeys. Father Bryan D. Stitt discussed priesthood, Sister Suanne talked about consecrated life, and questions about marriage were fielded by Paul and Samantha Poulin, and John McBride and Ellen Rose Miner, who were recently engaged.

After brief introductions, the students were able to ask questions of the panelists.

The day ended with Mass, celebrated by Bishop Terry R. LaValley.

IN THEIR OWN WORDS

Middle school students from around the diocese gathered this fall at Guggenheim for a vocation retreat. Here are their thoughts on the event:

“I had a lot of fun meeting new kids and I loved lunch. You taught me during the meeting with the panel that my vocation when I get older is to get married.” – Jenny O’Neill

“It was lots of fun. I learned that it’s important to listen to God for the calling of your vocation. I also liked the Mass with the bishop.” – Camryn Parrish

“Thank you for letting us come to your wonderful camp! One thing I learned was that God will lead you to where ever you belong. The really fun part about the trip was volleyball – everyone was so hyped!” – Brooklyn Huestis

“I learned that when God speaks to us, he leads us to something important called our vocation. A vocation is something that is important to God like getting married or being a priest or a nun.” – Carter Thatcher

“One thing I learned is that you don’t have to be Catholic to worship God. God is with me even though I’m not baptized. Another thing I learned is that Camp Guggenheim is so good of a camp that the bishop goes there!” – Kaelyn Hurlburt

“It’s sad that it’s my last year because I wish I could go back next year. One thing that I learned is to listen to God very carefully, so he can tell you your vocation one day. One fun thing I did there was play volleyball with all my friends and some kids that I didn’t even know. I had so much fun there!” – Kennedy McKeown
