Pope draws lessons from Mother Teresa

SKOPJE, North Macedonia (CNS) — Pope Francis went to the tiny Balkan nation of North Macedonia to pay tribute to a tiny saint who accomplished big things: St. Teresa of Kolkata.

Mother Teresa was born Agnes Ganxhe Bojaxhiu to Albanian parents in Skopje Aug. 26, 1910, so after paying the obligatory formal visit to North Macedonia’s president, Pope Francis went May 7 to the memorial and museum built on the site of the church where she was baptized. The church was later destroyed in an earthquake.

“Moved by the love of God,” the pope told the president, Mother Teresa “made love of neighbor the supreme law of her life.”

At the memorial, Pope Francis did not speak about the saintly founder of the Missionaries of Charity, but after praying silently before her relics, he praised God for the gift of her life and prayed for her intercession for North Macedonia.

Pope Francis also prayed that God would give Christians the grace “to become signs of love and hope in our own day when so many are poor, abandoned, marginalized and migrants.”

Among the guests present at the memorial were dozens of Missionaries of Charity, about 100 of the people they serve in Skopje, and two of Mother Teresa’s cousins, the Vatican said.

Celebrating Mass in the nearby Macedonia Square on a brisk spring morning, Pope Francis drew people’s attention to human hungers — the hunger for bread, but also the hunger for truth, for God and for love.

“How well Mother Teresa knew all this and desired to build her life on the twin pillars of Jesus incarnate in the Eucharist and Jesus incarnate in the poor,” he said. “Love received and love given” marked her journey from Skopje to India and kept her going.

Too many people, he said, “have become accustomed to eating the stale bread of disinformation,” and so they end up being prisoners of a worldview that makes them either indifferent to others or downright hostile.

Christians must never be afraid to tell God that they are hungry “for an experience of fraternity in which indifference, disparagement and contempt will not fill our tables or take pride of place in our homes,” he said. “We are hungry, Lord, for encounters where your word can raise hope, awaken tenderness and sensitize the heart by opening paths of transformation and conversion.”
I spent most of Friday afternoon not-so-secretly hoping the rain would continue and my son’s baseball game would be rained out. I love watching Jake play, but the weather was cool, damp and windy, and nothing makes me more miserable than being cold.

So, it was with great dismay that I read the text from Jake’s coach indicating the field was good and the game was on.

Jake’s team from Brushton-Moira was playing against a North Franklin team. They were playing in Fort Covington, the opposing team’s home field. We arrived at the park, and Jake joined his team for pre-game warm-ups. My husband and I claimed seats in the bleachers.

It quickly became clear that most of the people seated around us were supporting the home team.

As the game began and the first member of Jake’s team stepped up to the plate, the group behind us cheered on the player they came to see, a child who was playing left field, encouraging him to be attentive to the batter and ball.

Then, as the lead-off batter made contact and hit a grounder toward the short stop, a woman in the group behind me cheered the little guy on.

“Great hit,” she shouted.

While the short stop wasn’t able to get to the ball and get it to first base on time to make the out, the woman behind me raised him, too.

“For the entire game, she continued to cheer on every child from both teams. At one point, she explained her somewhat odd cheering practices.

“(A young family member) once told me, ‘you’re only supposed to cheer for our team,’” she told the people seated with her. “But they’re so little! They all deserve to have people cheering for them!”

My husband and I were soon cheering for both teams.

Sports are, by their nature, adversarial. It’s easy to view opponents as almost enemies, as those you hope to defeat. Yet here was this woman offering love to all these children, even those who were opponents.

This woman embodied Jesus’ call to love one another and love our enemies, and her love set an example for others to follow.

Despite the cold, it was a beautiful day at the ballpark.

On a related note, happy belated Mother’s Day to all the mothers, grandmothers and women who provide maternal support to others. Your selfless love is beautiful and inspiring.

Loving each other as Jesus loves us

During the Easter Season, a Sunday each year is dedicated to Jesus’ new commandment, his commandment of love. John’s Gospel describes at length Jesus’ discourse at the Last Supper. During that discourse, Jesus tells his apostles of his new commandment.

In John 13:34, Jesus says: “I give you a new commandment: love one another. As I have loved you, so you also should love one another. This is how all will know that you are my disciples if you have love for one another.”

This is a new commandment only in the sense that it sets a new standard — “as I have loved you.” Our goal as disciples of Jesus is to love others as Jesus loved. The apostles were well aware of the depths of the love with which Jesus lived and loved. The apostles witnessed the way that Jesus demonstrated his love for everyone he met. Jesus came to bring himself and his love for us all — for the people of all time. Jesus loved us all as he suffered and died on the cross. Such love this world has never known. The followers of Jesus have taught this love for all time. We are all to imitate Jesus when we love as he did.

We are all called to love like Jesus. We know the Gospel stories of Jesus’ love. Jesus loved others so deeply that he worked miracles, as a demonstration of his love, as he recognized others’ needs. Jesus’ love was so deep and so powerful that he often felt that he simply must do something. Can we love like Jesus? Is it possible? Jesus makes it clear for us that when we unite ourselves with him in a close and loving relationship, we will find the power, the faith and hope to love others as he loved; we will become a loving people.

So, let us talk about love. Here are a few ideas that I found somewhere. Love makes us instruments of God’s providence in the lives of others. Our love becomes the channel through which they will experience the love of God. Love always brings out the best in the one who loves. People are at their best and brightest when they love. Love is a choice not a feeling. But to refuse to love is to begin to die. The worst thing of all is a cold indifference.

As you might expect I have spoken of God’s love and mercy often in my homilies. Recently, our Sunday Scripture tells us of Jesus reaching out to Peter, preparing Peter to be a leader of the Church. Jesus challenges Peter to be a loving person. Jesus asks Peter three times: “Do you love me, Peter?”
Retreat speaker discusses hearing God’s call

NORFOLK – When diocesan Vocations Coordinator Cathy Russell heard Edwina Gately speak at a conference in Chicago, Russell knew she had to get this spell-binding speaker with a heroic story to the Diocese of Ogdensburg.

That goal turned into reality as dozens of women heard Gately speak at a one-day retreat on May 5 at the Father Amyot Parish Center in Norfolk.

Full of holy humor and wisdom, Gately spoke of her passion for God, and her journey, which includes missions to Africa and living in prayer in the woods for nine months.

Born in Lancaster, England, Gately’s relentless sense of mission started as a teenager when God’s call led her to serve the poorest of the poor in Africa for three years.

Upon returning to England and not wanting to sit on the sidelines, she founded the Volunteer Missionary Movement in 1969, an organization which dispatches nuns to Catholics around the world.

After a second mission in Africa’s Sahara Desert, Gately left her home country for the U.S., where she earned a degree in theology at the Catholic Theological Union in Chicago. Gately said after graduation, she was unsure what path to take next.

“I felt God tell me, you must do nothing,” she said. “It was a real trauma for me. I had to spend time trying to listen, trying to understand. How can I do nothing? What am I supposed to do?”

In search of a renewed calling, Gately used her lifefunds to purchase a mobile home, in which she would live and pray in for nine months in the woods in search of where God needed her next.

“As the months past nothing was happening,” she said. “The biggest temptation was to say I’ve done my bit, but I held on to nothing, and I think that’s what we have to do. I think we must learn what it means to hold on to nothing. And I think where we are now in our history and culture there’s not much to hold on to, except God.”

Suddenly, in the ninth month, Gately felt God’s presence. That led her to the streets of Chicago in 1983, where she spent over a year walking with the homeless and prostitutes.

“I realized my call was to tell these women who they really are,” she said. “They’re daughters of God.”

By the end of 1983, Gately founded Genesis House, a refuge for women involved in prostitution, and those seeking recovery from drug abuse and violence.

“My dream from the very beginning was to create a home, a family, not a program,” she said. “One of the biggest problems facing these women is they never felt connected and loved by family.”

While most people would be reluctant to frequent the streets of Chicago at 2 a.m., Gately said she never doubted the call she had to walk beside these women on the streets and in brothels spreading the Great Love.

Today, a resident of Erie, Pennsylvania, Gately continues to give talks and retreats internationally. Her speaking events help fund her program for women seeking recovery through a small foundation called “Sophia’s Circle.”

In all, Gately has helped over 1,500 women leave prostitution.

Gately advised the women gathered on recognizing when God is calling them. Gately said she believes we frequently question ourselves and God’s will, and she advised the retreat attendees to trust their hearts.

“If an idea comes to you and you’re a woman of prayer and you’re doing your best, then go, trust it,” she said.

The Rev. Susan Kohlmeier, from Zion Episcopal Church in Palmyra, traveled to Norfolk with three of her parishioners to hear Gately speak.

Rev. Kohlmeier said she has been attending Gately’s retreats for over 20 years, traveling to areas spanning from Quebec to Virginia to hear her speak.

“She’s just very life-giving,” she said. “And her energy and her enthusiasm and her mystical relationship to God is just really amazing.”

Norwood resident Denise Divincenzo said the event was an opportunity to refresh and renew and step away from the busyness of life.

“I think anytime we can gather more information that helps us become deeper in our faith, it’s always good,” she said.

The Volunteer Missionary Movement celebrates a milestone this year with its 50th anniversary. Gately reflected on her struggle to receive church support in the 1960s to start the organization, which has since sent over 3,000 volunteers to the poorest parts of the world, “I know God can move mountains,” Gately says, “they aren’t out there where all you need is a bulldozer, mountains are within us; mountains of doubt, disbelief, fear, those are the mountains that must be dissolved with a little bit of salt, yeast, and light to leave space for God’s seed within us.”
A different liturgical expression

LAKE PLACID -- Residents of the Diocese of Ogdensburg will have an opportunity to participate in a Byzantine rite Divine Liturgy this Pentecost, as the pastor and youth group from Holy Trinity Ukrainian Catholic Church visit the North Country from Carnegie, Pennsylvania.

The Divine Liturgy will be celebrated June 9 at 4 p.m. at St. Agnes Church in Lake Placid, with Father Jason Charron celebrating. Father Charron, who studied at Wadhams Hall Seminary in Ogdensburg, brings his community’s youth group to Camp Guggenheim every couple years.

“The kids love it there,” he said. “We’ve been celebrating the Divine Liturgy at St. Agnes in Lake Placid when we take those trips. This year, we thought, ‘this is something they don’t have there. Let’s open it up to the diocese.’ Bishop Terry (R. LaValley) has been very gracious, and everything came together.”

The Ukrainian Catholic Church celebrates in the Byzantine rite, one of seven rites listed in the Catechism of the Catholic Church as “lawfully recognized rites to be of equal right and dignity.” Attending the Divine Liturgy meets the Sunday obligation for Latin rite (Roman) Catholics.

“Through no fault of their own, people think the Latin expression is standard and other liturgical families are exceptions,” Father Charron said. “The various liturgical forms aren’t in competition. They’re complimentary and draw from each other going back to the common source in Jerusalem.”

Father Charron noted that Saint John Paul II and Venerable Fulton Sheen both celebrated the Liturgy in both the Latin and Byzantine rites.

Father Charron said those accustomed to a Latin rite Mass will likely find the Byzantine Divine Liturgy to be a spiritual version of “sensory overload.”

“The East employs all five senses to the highest degree possible in its worship,” Father Charron said. “Through the use of the five senses, man reaches a point of surrender to the inner life of God and the life of grace. That happens through the Liturgy. The entirety of the Liturgy is sung; no part is recited except the homily. Much of the Liturgy employs incense. There’s visual stimulation with iconography. There’s near-constant bowing, prostration and making the Sign of the Cross. It all aids in elevating the mind and heart to the contemplation of the heavenly kingdom.”

Father Charron also noted that reception of the Eucharist is done through “intinction.”

“It’s one faith, one baptism, one Lord, one church,” he said. “But the expression of that one faith takes on different forms. The Eastern Catholics and Orthodox adopted expressions of goodness and beauty as experienced in the Greek and Syriac cultures. One of the different expressions of that faith is the use of leavened bread and intinction. Intinction is the immersion of Eucharistic bread into the consecrated wine. When people approach for Communion, they tilt their heads back and open mouths. It’s like a nestling bird whose mother is about to drop nourishment into the mouth.”

With the Divine Liturgy being celebrated on Pentecost, Father Charron said Latin rite Catholics will likely notice at least one significant difference.

“Traditionally, we bring in trees from the forest and prop them up in the church,” he said. “The whole interior would be filled with greenery, branches and boughs. I’m not sure if we’ll be able to do that in this case, but our vestments are also green. It’s a sign of divine life.”

Because of the chanting and other liturgical differences, the Divine Liturgy lasts slightly longer than a typical Latin Mass, typically around an hour and ten minutes.

“You only get what you put into it,” Father Charron said. “Coming to worship, it takes around 20 minutes to decompress from the world and get our minds oriented. The first 20 minutes is sort of an easing into worship. It’s like a meal: when you come into a meal, you first have an appetizer, then the meal, then dessert. Same reality unfolds in divine worship. We have to dissociate ourselves from the world, the flesh and the devil.”

Father Charron said he looks forward to worshipping with North Country residents. He indicated that worship aids would be available to help the unfamiliar participate in the Divine Liturgy.

“If it’s possible, try to come without preconceived notions,” he said. “Prepare with prayers before the Liturgy; that’s part of our tradition. But come and sing your heart out in the glorification of the holy and life-giving Trinity.”
Camp Guggenheim opens with week one art offering

SARANAC LAKE — It’s almost camp season! Camp Guggenheim summer session begins June 30, and campers in that first week will notice a change from previous years.

“We’re doing a pilot program in week one to see if there’s interest in a camp experience that focuses on engaging in our faith through art and nature,” said Tom Semeraro, director of Youth Ministry for the Diocese of Ogdensburg. “Week one campers will be able to choose whether they want to participate in the traditional offerings – rotating through a variety of morning activities – or the art and nature offering.”

Those participating in the art pilot will spend the morning activity portion of the camp day creating and discussing art as an expression of faith.

“There will be opportunities to paint with water colors and draw in nature, discussions about artistic expressions within the church, work on written word or poetry, and photography,” Semeraro said. “All materials will be provided.”

If the program is successful, Semeraro said it could become a regular offering at Camp Guggenheim.

Beyond the week one pilot, Semeraro said campers will see both new and returning staff members at this year’s sessions. Staff biographies appear in today’s edition of the North Country Catholic and will continue to appear in the next several editions.

Campers, and those driving them to their designated sessions, will also notice improvements made to the camp access road.

Registration is still open for the 2019 Camp Guggenheim season. To register, go to rcdony.org/youth-camp/camp-guggenheim.

Concert to aid Mission effort

PERU — The popular North Country band, Towne Meeting, will perform its 10th Anniversary Concert to benefit Mission of Hope’s projects in Nicaragua.

The concert will be performed at St. Augustine’s Church in Peru at 7 p.m. on Sunday, June 9. Admission is by donation. During the past 10 years the band, with generous donations from the people of the North Country, has provided 432 families with safe cooking stoves through Mission of Hope.

Towne Meeting performs a previous benefit concert for Mission of Hope. The band will perform its tenth benefit concert for Mission of Hope on June 9.

Suggested resource: Catholic Daily Reflections

The following is an installment of “Resource of the Week,” a blog composed by Marika Donders, director of the New Evangelization. The NCC prints installments as space allows. To see the blog, go to rcdony.org/evangelization/blog.html.

There are many websites, apps and booklets that offer daily reflections on the Mass readings for the day, but my go-to resource for daily reflections to help me pray the readings of the day is a webpage https://catholic-daily-reflections.com/. It offers simple reflections on the daily gospel written by John Paul Thomas.

For each day, the author focuses in on one aspect of the Gospel, suggest an exercise of faith we may want to try - something to pray for or something to reflect on sometime during the day, and then offers a simple prayer to help us articulate our trust in Jesus.

For example, as I write this post on Wednesday, May 8, the Gospel reading in John 6:35-40, a continuation of the bread of life discourse. The reflection focuses in on the line “I will not reject anyone who comes to me” (Jn 6:37). And the reflection is all about how, if we have experienced the pain of rejection in our life, we may fear entering into relationships out of fear of being hurt again. We may even fear entering into relationship with Jesus. But Jesus assures us that he is trustworthy, that we can come to him without fear and that he will not reject us if we open our hearts to him.

We are invited to reflect on the love of Jesus in our life and how he wants us to be in relationship with him. And the reflection ends with a simple prayer.

“Lord, I want to come to You in my sufferings and rejection. I know You are the Divine Healer and will bring comfort to my soul. Help me to trust You and to let You love me. Jesus, I trust in You.”

Prayer need not be long-winded or complicated, and this website is a wonderful way to enter into the daily gospel and apply it to your life. (For the full reflection of this day see: https://catholic-daily-reflections.com/2019/05/07/never-rejected-always-loved-2/)

In addition to reflections on the gospel, the site offers daily reflections on the Divine Mercy, as well as seasonal resources and links to information about saints of the liturgical calendar.

Most of the information is also available in book form for those who prefer paper or e-books, and there is an app for android or apple. Personally, I simply have the webpage bookmarked on my phone for easy access, which I personally find easier than the app.

If you are looking for a resource to help you pray with the Gospel of the day, this is a solid resource.

Technology, hospitality impact parish vitality

William J. Amoriell
Member of Living Stones Planning Committee

In the last issue of the North Country Catholic, we discussed three elements that can impact parish vibrancy: (1) Evangelization: Children/Youth, Young Adults, Seniors, (2) Engaging Children and Youth in Meaningful Ways, and (3) Music.

In this issue, let’s look at (1) technology and (2) hospitality and socials.

Technology

When we talk about the need to be open and hospitable, ”the first portal of today’s parish is its website,” says author William E. Simon in his book, “Great Catholic Parishes.”

A parish website should contain all the information about a parish a parishioner needs to know. In addition to the Mass schedule, the weekly bulletin should be available online.

I know some pastors have considered the feasibility of installing large screens that can be seen by everyone for projecting hymns and readings.

Even though there are hymnals available in most churches, if you look around during Mass, you’ll see many parishioners not using them and not engaged with the hymns or responses. Screens are an investment that churches might consider. Some would say there is a direct positive correlation between the use of screens and the number of people who are fully engaged during Mass.

F’r. Steven told us they began projecting prayers and hymn lyrics up on large screens at one of the churches in this community three years ago. It quite literally has changed our celebration of the Sunday Eucharist,” Simon wrote. “When one parish renovated, they installed large screens. Now, they broadcast the words across the screens and the parishioners sing out. Some parishes have done away with the songbook entirely in favor of screens.”

As mentioned earlier, Molly and I attended Mass at St. Michael’s Catholic Church in Fernandina Beach, Florida recently. They installed two large screens and projected the hymns and responses on the screen throughout Mass. It was remarkable the difference the screens made in terms of the participation of those in attendance.

Hospitality and Socials

Our last topic in developing vibrant parishes involves hospitality and socials. Churches must provide welcoming environments for parishioners and guests attending a church service. It is important for people to feel comfortable in their place of worship.

I would like to share another experience we had attending St. Michael’s in Fernandina Beach, Florida:

The greeters there, as in our parishes, offered an initial welcome, but it didn’t stop there. Before Mass began, the pastor asked for the visitors to raise their hands and for the parishioners located next to the visitors to introduce themselves and to offer a warm welcome to their church. The pastor went on about how much he appreciated our attendance and that we were always welcome at St. Michael’s. Unfortunately, many of our churches don’t get many visitors/guests, so this might not be practical in all cases. Nevertheless, there needs to be a genuine spirit of welcoming to everyone who comes into the church.

Since I am sharing experiences we had in other churches, let me add one more vignette:

This was a Catholic church in Virginia that we attended for Christmas Mass while visiting our son and his family. The church was filled. One of the lay ministers in the choir took the microphone and, in a very unpleasant tone, told everyone to find a seat and keep quiet, as the choir was about to sing. It was obvious that the person speaking was directing her comments to those who probably attended only at Christmas and Easter.

Nevertheless, the tone, besides being inappropriate, was a perfect example of how to be unwelcoming. It sometimes comes down to the little things we say and how we say them that can make a difference – one way or the other.

When Bishop LaValley hosted a number of Listening Sessions as part of his Envisioning Process a few years ago, he sought advice from parishioners as to areas that the diocese should focus on. Parishioners were encouraged to attend the listening sessions and provide the Bishop with their thoughts on the strengths of the church and areas that need addressing.

As was mentioned in the first article in this series, the three diocesan priorities evolved out of this process.

The point that I want to make here is there were many comments that related to the need for our churches to become more welcoming. Hospitality is important, and it makes people feel good about being a member of the community. This feeling or spirit should not be underestimated.

Vibrant parishes not only provide welcoming environments, they also consider the scheduling of social activities as an important part of building vibrant parishes. It is also seen as an important way to get Catholics who have fallen away or people considering Catholicism to get engaged in an informal way with the church.

All of our parishes include active parishioners and disengaged parishioners. Unfortunately, the disengaged can actually be a larger number than the active parishioners. We need some way to draw disengaged and fallen-away Catholics back into the church community.

Social activities sponsored by a parish, with no expectation that anyone attending needs to be an active participant of the church, can help the disengaged and fallen-away Catholics to begin during the social activities to make connections with our more engaged parishioners.

“Several pastors talked about developing social occasions that had no overt ‘join our church’ hook,” Simon wrote. “Such secular activities forge initial contact with new people. Friendship and familiarity can pave the way for a future invitation to worship. One of the challenges is to offer high-quality events that intersect with the personal interests of a large enough number of unchurched people to justify the effort and the related costs.”

That’s where the social dimension comes in. Vibrant parishes need to consider Social Committees that have responsibility for offering throughout the year various social activities open to all people in their area: potluck dinners, movie nights (targeted at youth and adults), discussions, game nights (targeted at youth and adults), sports contests, etc.

These kinds of activities can be an important way of getting the disengaged parishioners interested in becoming more actively involved and re-engaged in the church community.

We have some parishes in the diocese that already do this. Perhaps, we need to look more closely at this and discuss how to infuse social activities into the overall pastoral planning of the parish community.

“When parishioners start filing out of the church, vibrant parishes provide more for them than just a friendly goodbye wave,”
Impact parish vibrancy

Simon wrote, “Some pastors encourage parishioners to stay behind by hosting a breakfast where people can get to know each other. Others prefer the classic coffee and donuts to accompany the long conversations that can take place outside the church after Mass. It takes planning and work to create reasons for people to stick around and connect after Mass…” Food for thought.

Concluding Statement:
The Living Stones Planning Committee hopes you have found something useful in this series of articles and that it might be a continuing stimulus for discussion, planning, and positive change.

We cannot continue to do business as usual. We have the talent, creativity, and opportunity to begin a process of dynamic and significant change that can, in time, lead to the development of vibrant parishes--parishes in an even stronger position to meet the pastoral needs of all parishioners.

We may also be daunted by the task that lies ahead. Look at the struggles the church’s faithful have had to endure over the centuries in trying to evangelize and spread the faith. We are fortunate to have a Catholic Church that is steeped in tradition and culture. The church has had to grow and change over the centuries as society has developed and changed. This couldn’t have been more evident than in the Second Vatican Council from 1962-65 that profoundly changed the structures and practices of the church.

This series of articles has presented many facts and figures. However, as we know, Jesus saw first and foremost with His heart and that is how we must respond to this crisis— with our hearts, and then with our time and talents for the survival of the Church, which we all love.

From the earliest beginning, its history is filled with stories of sacrifice. We are now called to sacrifice. Our church is faced with a critical problem, one perhaps made more so, because it is insidious, as the effects come upon us slowly.

Shaking our heads and yearning for the good old days will not bring solution. Working together, side by side, parish by parish, will.

Don’t forget that in our parish communities, personal and spiritual growth is a shared responsibility.

As already mentioned, the parishes need to develop activities to be offered and parishioners need to come and participate in those activities to demonstrate their commitment to the community and their commitment to personal and spiritual growth on all levels.

Young families face the demands of balancing work and family and wonder how they could add one more thing to the "to-do list."

Perhaps older parishioners think, "It does not matter, I will not be around." However, there comes a time when the church calls us—all of us—and we must respond—for our children, our grandchildren, and those children whose names we do not even know.

Ensuring the survival of a vibrant church in the end may not be for us, but let it be because of us.

Let us pray for the courage, strength, and perseverance to accomplish the task.

Let’s sail and not "fall adrift or lie at anchor." Let’s finish with Oliver Wendell Holmes’s quote cited earlier in these articles:

“I find the great thing in this world is not so much where we stand, as in what direction we are moving: To reach the port of heaven, we must sail sometimes with the wind and sometimes against it, but we must sail, and not drift, nor lie at anchor.”

Thank You and God Bless.

Pope issues new norms on mandatory abuse reporting

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – Pope Francis has revised and clarified norms and procedures for holding bishops and religious superiors accountable in protecting minors as well as in protecting members of religious orders and seminarians from abuse.

The new juridical instrument is meant to help bishops and religious leaders around the world clearly understand their duties and church law, underlining how they are ultimately responsible for proper governance and protecting those entrusted to their care. For this reason, the new document establishes a clearer set of universal procedures for reporting suspected abuse, carrying out initial investigations and protecting victims and whistleblowers.

The new document, given "motu proprio," on the pope's own initiative, was titled "Vos estis lux mundi" ("You are the light of the world"), based on a verse from the Gospel of St. Matthew (5:14).

"The crimes of sexual abuse offend Our Lord, cause physical, psychological and spiritual damage to the victims and harm the community of the faithful," the pope said in the document, released by the Vatican May 9. The norms go into effect June 1.

In order to stop all forms of abuse from ever happening again, not only is "a continuous and profound conversion of hearts" necessary, there must be "concrete and effective actions that involve everyone in the church," he wrote.

Cardinal Marc Ouellet, prefect of the Congregation for Bishops, said the new norms ascribe a new role to heads of dioceses by making them responsible for alerting the proper Vatican authorities of all forms of suspected abuse, including the possession, distribution or creation of pornography involving a minor.

He told Vatican News May 9 that the norms respond to Pope Francis' continued insistence for concrete and effective measures to ensure bishops and religious superiors have a very clear understanding of what their obligations are and what they should and should not do when it comes to safeguarding.

It also requires all priests and religious to report suspected abuse or cover-ups and encourages any lay person to report through a now-mandated reporting "system" or office in each diocese.

How the office or "system" works will be up to each diocese, but "the idea is that anyone who has suffered abuse can have recourse to the local church, while being assured they will be well received, protected from retaliation, and that their reports will be treated with the utmost seriousness," Andrea Tornielli, editorial director of the Dicastery for Communication, told Vatican News.

The new norms now stipulate:

- Procedures for the investigation of bishops, cardinals, patriarchs, religious superiors and all those who lead – even temporarily – a diocese or particular church, including personal prelates and personal ordinariats.
- Leaders will be held accountable not only with suspected cases of committing abuse themselves, but also accusations of having interfered with, covered up or failed to address abuse accusations they were aware of.
- When the accused individual is a bishop, the metropolitan will receive a mandate from the Holy See to investigate or delegate a person in charge of the preliminary investigation. A status report must be sent to the Holy See every 30 days, and the investigation completed with 90 days with some exceptions. Vatican offices are also held to specific timeframes and prompt action.
- By June 2020, every diocese in the world must create an office or "public, stable and easily accessible systems" for reporting suspected abuse against a minor or vulnerable person, failure of compliance of abuse guidelines by bishops or superiors, and cases of interference or cover-ups in either a civil or canonical investigation of suspected abuse.
- All priests and religious that become aware of abuse or its cover-up must alert their bishop or religious superior promptly.
- A minor is anyone under the age of 18 and a vulnerable person is "any person in a state of infirmity, physical or mental deficiency, or deprivation of personal liberty which, in fact, even occasionally, limits their ability to understand or to want to otherwise resist the offense."
- The definition of child pornography as any representation of a minor, regardless of the media used, "involved in explicit sexual activities, whether real or simulated, and any representation of sexual organs of minors for primarily sexual purposes."
NEW YORK (CNS)—By turns lyrical and moving, “Tolkien” (Fox Searchlight) is a sophisticated profile of the future novelist’s youth that succeeds on a number of levels. This may not be the biography that every fan of Catholic author J.R.R. Tolkien (1892-1973) is looking for, and it may not even fully accomplish what its makers set out to achieve. But, if nothing else, it does tell the story of the young Tolkien and his times.

Director Dome Karukoski and screenwriters David Gleeson and Stephen Beresford trace Tolkien’s passage from orphaned and impoverished schoolboy (Harry Gilby) to Oxford University scholar-student and beleaguered officer in the trenches of World War I (Nicholas Hoult).

Beginning with Tolkien’s quest to locate a friend and fellow soldier during the 1916 Battle of the Somme, extended flashbacks take us to earlier periods both happy and sad. Most significantly, they show us how Tolkien bonded with a trio of precociously gifted peers—Geoffrey Smith (Anthony Boyle), Robert Gilson (Patrick Gibson) and Christopher Wiseman (Tom Glynn-Carney)—and fell for his future wife, Edith (Lily Collins).

After a shaky start at Oxford, Tolkien also eventually finds his initial vocation as a philologist after coming under the spell of magisterial professor of that subject, Joseph Wright (Derek Jacobi).

As Tolkien wanders the scarred, mud-ridden landscape of the battlefield, vague visions of huge dragons and galloping warriors emerge from, then return behind, the smoke of war. This suggests that Karukoski and his collaborators are intent on showing how his service in the global conflict shaped Tolkien’s most famous works, his 1937 novel “The Hobbit” and “The Lord of the Rings” trilogy published 1954-55.

If so, however, the connection between real life and Middle-Earth remains elusive.

Certainly, the horrors of Tolkien’s experience may have inspired his portrayal of the forces of darkness and the travails to which his adventurers are subjected. And the deep friendship shared by the members of the club Tolkien and his pals formed may be reflected in the fictional fellowship referred to in one of his titles. But none of this is clearly or satisfactorily delineated in the film.

As for the strong faith that also contributed to Tolkien’s outlook, its only representative is Father Francis (Colm Meaney), the caring but stern priest who served as his guardian after the death of both his parents. This may leave Catholic moviegoers feeling somewhat cheated, though it’s not clear how strong a hold religion had on Tolkien in these early stages of his life.

What the creators of “Tolkien” are most successful in capturing is the broad range of emotions to which their protagonist must have been subjected by his varied fortunes. Thus the buoyant camaraderie that led the imaginative, artistically inclined quartet to regard themselves as brothers gives way, in the poignant latter part of the movie, to the grim fate in which they were all caught up and the toll it exacted on them.

The film contains some harsh combat violence, a few gruesome images and a bit of slightly bawdy humor. The Catholic News Service classification is A-II—adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13—parents strongly cautioned. Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.
Apostles grow in confidence about future

Each of the seven Sundays after Easter describe for us the reactions of the apostles to the news that Jesus was even more alive after Good Friday than He was before his death on the cross. They gradually began to understand how necessary it was for Him to die in order to accomplish His mission from the Father — freeing mankind from the ancient curse. On this Fifth Sunday of Easter, each of the readings show us how the apostles became more and more confident about the future.

In the first reading, Paul and Barnabas have just completed their first missionary journey. In village after village, as only a few of the Jews accept their message, they turn to a more receptive gentle audience. Now they know this is God’s plan — a truly “catholic” church in which God welcomes both Jews and non-Jews to the Good News of salvation.

In the second reading from the “dream vision” of John, the Book of Revelation, God describes through mysterious, symbolic language, what the future will bring for the church. It will bring much suffering, rejection, and martyrdom, but it will also bring final victory and eternal joy to the vast multitude of those “washed in the Blood of the Lamb.”

The old order has passed away. From the throne, God promises: “Behold, I make all things new.” His Church, therefore, is to be dynamic and flexible with eyes always fixed on its purpose of bringing all to salvation.

In the Gospel, taken from Jesus’ farewell discourse just hours before His betrayal by Judas, their Master and Lord solemnly reveals to them a new commandment. Love — “agape” — self-sacrificing love for one another, is to be the sign by which all will know they are His followers.

That love is to flow through their faith and works into the structure and authority of His church. Love is to form the basis for all its ministry as well. “This is how all will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another”

Our Pope Francis has made real efforts to bring the outward face of the church more in line with the humble, loving, and caring face of Jesus as it carries out the everyday work of its worldwide mission. May the example of Pope Francis give new life to the spirit of love, truth, and service in every local church.

A saint for our times

The following is an unsigned editorial titled: “A saint for our times,” which appeared online May 8 on the website of The Catholic Register, the Toronto-based national Catholic Canadian newspaper. It is printed here with permission from Catholic News Service.

Jean Vanier, Canadian writer, philosopher and humanitarian who died May 7, was a champion for people with intellectual disabilities and touched countless lives through his constant message of love.

“The message of the Gospel,” he once said, “is to become men and women of compassion. If you become a man or a woman of compassion, you will be like Jesus.”

It was that quest to be a man of compassion that led Vanier to leave a comfortable university teaching post at Toronto’s St. Michael’s College more than half a century ago and move to France. Living in a dilapidated house in a town north of Paris, he was introduced to two men with mental disabilities and was moved by the experience.

“I discovered a whole world of pain, of brokenness,” he once recalled.

The natural reaction for many people would be to turn away from pain and brokenness. Vanier embraced it. He invited the two men to come live with him, not as wards or even roommates, but as brothers, as family.

At age 36, the accomplished Catholic university professor was a student again, learning about purpose and life and seeing the Gospel message in an entirely new light. These two men, shunned by a world that was unmoved by their disability and indifferent to their humanity, opened Vanier’s eyes to what it means to be a true disciple of Christ, to not just preach love and compassion, but to actually live it.

“The wonderful thing is that when we live with people with disabilities, not only are they transformed, because they discover they’re loved, but we also are transformed,” Vanier once told an interviewer.

From that discovery, L’Arche was born. From a single ramshackle home north of Paris, today there are 152 L’Arche communities in 37 countries around the world. These are not institutions for people with disabilities. They are living communities of people with and without disabilities in which, through mutual care, respect and compassion, all the residents — those providing support and those being supported — are inspired to reach their full potential.

“That is the secret of the philosophy of L’Arche — that we transform each other in helping each other to become more human and more like Jesus,” Vanier said.

It pained Vanier to recognize that, in a culture which tends to measure success by degrees of wealth, fame and power, the weak and vulnerable often were “put aside.” Doing so is arrogant and prideful, a contradiction of our shared humanity and the Gospel. But Vanier’s embrace of the disabled showed him mankind’s path back to humility could be found through sincere relationships with those who have been humiliated.

Vanier leaves behind vibrant L’Arche communities, but his real legacy is the model of love and compassion upon which they were built.

Gratitude for your 2019 Lenten appeal sacrifices

Give it up for Lent,” they say. Yes, and give it to God by way of His most needy. Such charity and goodness literally go to the ends of the earth.

In this, the year of upcoming “Extraordinary Mission Month” coming up in October, may the Lord bless you and your loved ones as we celebrate the Easter season and our pending celebration of missionaries.

Through you, may He do the same for countless souls far away.

Life is filled with challenges.

At times, our own reality may seem like an endless journey of hardship.

We face perhaps the serious illness of someone we love, or maybe job loss or financial difficulties, or simply the trials of daily living.

What we need to recognize is that we are not alone. We live in a global village that is sharing the same dilemmas and challenges.

The following passage comes to mind:

“Neighbors in a Global Village”

“Not just the ones living next door, or down the block. Not just those from my hometown or country... No, my neighbors may or may not look or talk or think like me. My neighbors may be of another faith or race or political persuasion. My neighbors are whoever needs my help right now, whether standing beside me or half a world away.”

– A passage from "Who are My Neighbors," a meditation by Joseph Veneroso, M.M.

I am most grateful for your Lenten sacrifices.

These blessings to the Church serve the poor of the Missions. Our brothers and sisters in Christ in nations far away have a better life because of your gifts.

Remember that in the Missions, a seemingly small gift goes a very long way to help the Church serve the needy.

Please remember “The Society for the Propagation of the Faith” in your Will.

Pope: Hope, mercy needed to combat indifference

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — In a world marked by violence, conflict as well as material and spiritual poverty, men and women need the Gospel message of hope, Pope Francis told members of the U.S.-based Papal Foundation.

Speaking to foundation members May 10, the pope thanked them for their contributions and work that “helps to bring the Gospel message of hope and mercy to all who benefit from your commitment and generosity.”

“For this I thank you, and I pray that you will be renewed in your purpose to help build the church in unity and advance her charitable outreach to the least of our brothers and sisters,” he said.

Each spring, members of the foundation make a pilgrimage to Rome and present to the pope the projects they have funded for the year.

Established in 1988, the foundation has awarded millions of dollars in grants and scholarships since 1990.

The grants provide funds to build or repair churches, schools, convents and seminaries and to fund projects ranging from evangelization and communications training to helping a parish in Africa install a solar energy plant.

Pope Francis said since its founding, the Papal Foundation has “contributed much to the fostering of a spirit of fraternity and peace.”

“Through your support of various educational, charitable and apostolic projects, as well as the scholarships made available to lay men and women, those living the consecrated life and priests, you give witness to the uniring efforts of the church to promote the integral development of the human family,” he said.
Study on women deacons was inconclusive

ABOARD THE PAPAL FLIGHT FROM NORTH MACEDONIA (CNS) – The commission Pope Francis appointed to study the history and identity of women deacons did not reach a unanimous conclusion about whether deaconesses in the early church were "ordained" or formally "blessed," the pope said.

"What is fundamental is that there was no certainty that there was an ordination with the same form and same aim as the ordination of men," the pope told reporters flying with him from North Macedonia to Rome May 7.

Pope Francis spent just under half an hour on the short flight answering questions, including about the study of women deacons he commissioned in August 2013.

After the six men and six women scholars on the commission finished their work, he said, there was "some agreement," but not on the crucial question of whether women were ordained or solemnly blessed like abbesses are.

"Some say there are doubts," the pope said. "Well, then, let's study some more. I don't have a problem with that."

At a May 2016 meeting with the women's International Union of Superiors General, leaders of women's religious orders, one of them had asked the pope, "What prevents the church from including women among permanent deacons, as was the case in the primitive church? Why not constitute an official commission to study the matter?"

The pope had told the sisters that his understanding was that the women described as deaconesses in the New Testament were not ordained like permanent deacons are. Mainly, he had said, it appeared that they assisted with the baptism by immersion of other women, with anointing women and with giving witness on behalf of women seeking a dissolution of their marriage because their husbands beat them.

However, the pope had promised to set up the commission, and two of the scholars said in January that they had completed their work. The pope did not tell reporters what steps, if any, would come next.

Although the flight was only 90 minutes and he took only four questions, Pope Francis wanted to share with reporters two moments he described as particularly "touching" during the May 5-7 trip to Bulgaria and North Macedonia.

The first, he said, was giving first Communion to 245 children in Rakovski, Bulgaria, May 6, which made him think back to his own first Communion.

And, he said, he was moved seeing Missionaries of Charity in Skopje, North Macedonia, where St. Teresa of Kolkata was born, and noticing the meekness and tenderness of the sisters with the poor.

"Today we are used to insulting each other, aren't we? One politician insults the other; a neighbor insults the other. Even in families people insult each other," he said. "I don't know if I can say there is a 'culture of insult,' but insults are a weapon always at hand."

Instead, he said, people should be inspired by the way the Missionaries of Charity treat each person as if he or she were Jesus.
