Ministering to the imprisoned

Heeding the Lord’s call, priests, deacons and lay ministers from around the diocese are visiting and ministering to the imprisoned as prison chaplains. “Not too many people want to step behind those clanking doors to help those who are incarcerated,” said Tamra Murphy, prison chaplain at Altona Correctional Facility. “In a lot of ways, inmates are pushed aside and looked down upon for what they’ve done in their pasts. When they walk through the chapel doors, they’re no longer inmates and their crimes no longer matter. They’re children of God.”

DAUGHTERS ON RETREAT

The Catholic Daughters Court #2663 in Morrisonville hosts an annual retreat to St. Anne’s Shrine in Isle La Motte, VT. for all the courts in the Diocese of Ogdensburg, Bishop Terry R. LaValley and Father Scott Seymour, past state chaplain for the Catholic Daughters, attend yearly. This year, Court #2663 invited courts from Vermont along with their Bishop to share the day of prayer, lunch and forming connections.

Pope: Proclaim God's love by caring for needy

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — While listening to and obeying God’s word brings healing and comfort to those in need, it also can attract disdain and even hatred from others, Pope Francis said.

Christians are called to proclaim the love of God through their care for the sick and the needy, like St. Peter and the other disciples who went to various cities bringing spiritual and physical healing to many, the pope said during his weekly general audience in St. Peter’s Square Aug. 28.

While Peter’s healing of the sick also “aroused the hatred of the Sadducees,” the pope said, his response to them to “obey God instead of men” is the “key to Christian life.”

“Let us also ask the Holy Spirit for the strength to not be frightened in the face of those who command us to be silent, who slander us and even threaten our lives,” he said. “Let us ask him to strengthen us inwardly to be certain of the loving and comforting presence of the Lord at our side.”

The pope continued his series of talks on the Acts of the Apostles and reflected on St. Peter’s role in leading the early church’s mission of proclaiming Christ’s love and of healing the sick and the suffering.

Today, like in St. Peter’s day, he said, “the sick are the privileged recipients of the joyous proclamation of the kingdom, they are brothers and sisters in whom Christ is present in a special way so that they may be sought out and found by all of us.”

“The sick are the privileged ones for the church, for the priestly heart, for all the faithful. They are not to be discarded; on the contrary, they are to be cured, to be cared for: they are the object of Christian concern,” the pope said.

Despite their good works, Christ’s early followers were subject to persecution by those who saw the miracles performed “not by magic but in the name of Jesus” and did not want to accept them.

“Thereir hearts were so hardened that they did not want to believe what they saw,” the pope explained.

Nevertheless, Pope Francis said, Peter’s response to obey God is a reminder for Christians today to listen to God "without reservation, without delay, without calculation" so that they may be united with him and with their neighbor, especially the poor and the sick.

"In the wounds of the sick, in the sicknesses that are impediments to moving forward in life, there is always the presence of Jesus," he said. "There is Jesus who calls each of us to look after them, to support them, to heal them."

On one of the cooler recent nights, I sat on my enclosed porch. I had neither an e-reader/book in my hands, as I often would on such evenings, nor my phone or laptop.

My husband, Adam, peaked out the porch door and saw me staring into the darkness. He stood in the doorway for a few seconds before asking, “What are you doing?”

“I’m just sitting here listening to the crickets,” I replied.

Normally, if I use the word “crickets,” I’m not talking about the bug. I’m much more likely to use the word in its more modern usage—to signify silence (example: “I asked Jake why he didn’t finish washing the dishes. The response: Crickets. He didn’t say a word”). Yet this was not silence. The chirps were coming from all directions. The sound of what was likely hundreds, maybe thousands of crickets blended into a continuous and ubiquitous song. It was surround-sound chirping.

“I hadn’t even noticed them until you said that,” Adam said.

Normally, I’d make a playful remark about my husband being not very observant, but I think we’ve all had the experience of becoming so accustomed to the presence of a sound, we no longer notice it. My family lives in a home surrounded by woods. The sounds of nature, especially crickets, are ever-present in our lives, at least during the warmer months.

Thinking about that, I thought about how I allow myself to turn God into those crickets. God is all around me. He’s with me—with all of us—always. He’s ever-present and all-knowing. I sometimes take that for granted, and I thoughtlessly ignore His workings in my life and in the world. I let God fall into the background.

That’s something I’ve been trying to work on. I’m trying to be more aware of and more thankful for God’s blessings and His presence in my life. I try to give myself little reminders—a prayer card placed in the console of my vehicle, the palm cross in my kitchen, the medal I typically wear around my neck. These items remind me to pray, to give thanks.

And, of course, I now have the crickets.
Ministering to the imprisoned

“For I was hungry and you gave me food, I was thirsty and you gave me drink, a stranger and you welcomed me, naked and you clothed me, ill and you cared for me, in prison and you visited me.” Then the righteous will answer him and say, “Lord, when did we see you hungry and feed you, or thirsty and give you drink? When did we see you a stranger and welcome you, or naked and clothe you? When did we see you ill or in prison, and visit you?” And the king will say to them in reply, “Amen, I say to you, whatever you did for one of these least brothers of mine, you did for me.” – Matthew 25:35-40

Heeding the Lord’s call, priests, deacons and lay ministers from around the diocese are visiting and ministering to the imprisoned as prison chaplains.

“Not too many people want to step behind those clanking doors to help those who are incarcerated,” said Tamra Murphy, prison chaplain at Altona Correctional Facility and the first female prison chaplain in the diocese. “In a lot of ways, inmates are pushed aside and looked down upon for what they’ve done in their pasts. When they walk through the chapel doors, they’re no longer inmates and their crimes no longer matter. They’re children of God, and that’s how I try to treat them. To have someone who looks at them as human and not just as felons gives them hope and a bit of self-esteem.”

In addition to administering or arranging for the sacraments, prison chaplains have a variety of ways they serve the inmate population, but they need to coordinate the needs of their ministry with the regulations and protocols established by the state and the facilities where they serve.

“Sometimes the state requirements and what I’d like to do with my ministry clash,” said Don Wilder, chaplain at the correctional facilities in Watertown and Cape Vincent. “When I first accepted this position, I thought I’d be having a communion service every day for Catholic inmates. It turned out, I get one and a half hours per week.”

Outside that hour and a half, the chaplains coordinate inmate participation in faith-based activities of all faiths and denominations.

“We’re the staff advisors for Muslims, Rastafarians, Native Americans, the Jewish population, Nations of Gods and Earths,” said Deacon Lawrence “Larry” Morse, chaplain at Ogdensburg Correctional Facility and Gouverneur Correctional Facility. “Those are the most prominent faiths in the facilities.”

“We also have a couple who practice Wicca or Jedi-ism,” added Wilder.

In addition, the chaplains make rounds in the facilities’ special housing units, for inmates who need more secure environments due to either behaviors or risk factors, as well as medical units and general population housing units.

“It’s about making connections,” said Deacon Bryan Bashaw, chaplain at Franklin Correctional Facility in Malone. “It’s an opportunity for inmates to approach you. Maybe they have a question about faith or the Bible. Maybe it’s completely unrelated.”

“Sometimes they want to talk about something personal,” added Deacon Morse. “Sometimes they want me to call the (correction officers) to make an appointment to come see me.”

The chaplains said they often help inmates process difficult situations.

“Once you establish connections, it doesn’t matter what faith or who you are, (the inmates) have the trust to come talk to you about anything,” said Wilder. “You’re the one person they can open up to about anything – what’s bothering them or what’s hurting them. If they lose a family member on the outside, we get to help them deal with it and support them. In fact, that’s one of the most rewarding things I do as a chaplain.”

“We’re also there to help the staff,” added Murphy.

“Sometimes, they need someone to talk to, or have a question about faith, too.”

Father Alan J. Lamica, chaplain at Altona, Franklin, Bare Hill and Upstate correctional facilities, said he also finds saying Mass in the facilities to be a rewarding experience.

“It’s a very diverse group,” he said. “There are a lot of nationalities represented. And everyone who is there wants to be there, and they participate.”

When asked how the faithful can support the prison chaplains in their ministry, the chaplains had several suggestions.

“Pray for the inmates and staff,” said Murphy. “And pray for us.”

“Consider volunteering and supporting your local chaplain,” added Deacon Bashaw. “Of course, there’s no money in volunteering, but the rewards of helping someone is more fulfilling than any paycheck.”

“We can always use things like Bibles and Rosaries,” said Deacon Morse. “The state doesn’t provide those.”

“And we can use liturgical items, if a parish has surplus or if a church is closing,” added Murphy.

Deacon Bashaw also noted that a number of the existing chaplains are nearing retirement age.

“We’ll need people to take our places,” he said.

Campus ministry: More than Mass and pizza

With the Bishop's Fund Appeal now underway, the North Country Catholic will be highlighting some of the ministries supported by the Bishop's Fund.

Deacon Rich Burns
Coordinator of Campus Ministry

What comes to mind when you hear the term "Campus Ministry?” Many of us of a certain age will recall our own fun times in a Newman Club, inevitably involving pizza and prayer. However, Campus Ministry is so much more than that, and it is a ministry as diverse as the Diocese is wide.

The North Country is home to 10 college campuses that welcome students from across the state, across the country, and increasingly, around the world. There are three community colleges, four SUNY campuses, and three private schools. From liberal arts to music and theatre, forestry to technology and engineering, about 23,000 students pursue diverse courses of study in two-year, four-year and graduate programs in our great educational institutions.

There are four Campus Ministers serving in the Diocese: Mary Skillan in Plattsburgh (SUNY Plattsburgh and Clinton Community College); Conner Cummings in Potsdam (SUNY Potsdam and Clarkson University); Amanda Conklin in Canton (SUNY Canton and St Lawrence University); and Sister Juliana Raymond in Watertown (Jefferson Community College). Their ministry is funded in large part by the annual Bishop's Fund Appeal. The campuses of Paul Smith’s College, North Country Community College, and the NYS Ranger School at Wanakena do not currently have a Campus Minister present.

Campus Ministry is busy throughout the academic year with familiar activities for the students: snacks after Mass, Newman Club dinners that provide home-cooked meals and fellowship, bible study nights, and Eucharistic Adoration. There are hikes, bonfires and barbecues, the required blessing of the brains and bags of goodies for study breaks before finals. Newman Club gives students a chance to socialize in a safe environment and discuss the challenge of living a Catholic faith in a world increasingly hostile to believers.

However, Campus Ministry is not just about activities with the students, otherwise it could be called “Student Ministry!” Our Campus Ministers engage with the entire college community where they serve, providing a distinctly Catholic presence on campus through their “tabling” at information fairs, engagement with the interfaith community on campus and providing invitations and benedictions at major events like commencement. Office hours often provide opportunities to answer questions from non-Catholics about the Church and our faith.

Sometimes Campus Ministry is just about providing ad-hoc assistance to a non-traditional student at a community college when no other options are available. Sometimes it’s jumping into action when the tragedy of an untimely death strikes the campus community to provide an organized opportunity to mourn.

Our Campus Ministers are engaged in the dialogue on campus about current social justice issues and providing a Catholic perspective to the conversation. They have worked with other faith groups to organize events to combat racism on campus and welcome international students.

The high points of the year are when college students from across the North Country get together for intercollegiate events. In the fall, students are invited to attend a retreat at Camp Guggenheim, an opportunity for prayer and reflection in the beauty of the Adirondacks. For the past several years, a group of college students from our Diocese has made the long trip to Washington, DC for the annual March for Life to display their support for the unborn. There is also often an event during the spring semester, either a retreat or workshop. Other events are more spontaneous, such as when Canton and Potsdam students connect for Eucharistic Adoration with Praise and Worship music.

Campus Ministry is challenged by today’s culture of relativism, and the increasingly secular environment on campus. Often there is much talk about “inclusion” on campus, but Catholic teaching is viewed with hostility by the administration and other students. Recent scandals in the Church have had an impact on the perceived authority of the Church’s positions on moral questions. An increasing number of today’s young people identify with no organized religion or are confessed atheists. Catholic students need to be strengthened in their faith, get solid answers to their questions, and be given the space to discern what God is calling them to do with their lives after college. Catholic Campus Ministry provides the encouragement, the education, and the environment to allow them to grow into great Catholic adults.

Campus Ministry could not exist without generous support from the annual Bishop’s Fund appeal, which provides the funding for the Campus Ministers and much of the programming throughout the year. On behalf of all the Campus Ministers and the students across the Diocese, I’d like to express heartfelt thanks for your prayers and your financial support!
Environmental Stewardship

What's on your list?

One suggestion for prayer and action this month comes from the Pope's Worldwide Prayer Network (Apostleship of Prayer) September Intention: The Protection of the Oceans. That politicians, scientists and economists work together to protect the world's seas and oceans.

Father Peter Schmeller, SJ, offers some reflections on this intention.

"Photos from the space station show planet earth as a beautiful blue marble with two-thirds of it covered by water. But here on earth, it is not so beautiful... Ocean plastics kill millions of marine animals each year. Whales die with stomachs filled with plastic refuse. Coral reefs that sustain fisheries and tourism are disappearing. Every year, 300 million tons of metals, sludge, and solvents are dumped into the world's waters. One-third of fish species are threatened with extinction.

The Bishops of the Philippines once asked: "Who has turned the wonder world of the seas into underwater cemeteries bereft of color and life?" We who are causing this destruction can and must reverse our direction and come to the aid of our planet.

How? First we must acknowledge the reality, the destruction that continues... Life came from and continues to come from water, from the oceans. Pope Francis has called for an "ecological conversion."

Pope Francis explained that Christians have a responsibility to care for the world's seas and oceans. Calling this an emergency that must be fought with active commitment, he pleaded: "It is my prayerful hope that Christian communities may cooperate more and more concretely to help everyone to enjoy this indispensable resource, in respectful care for the gifts received from the Creator, and in particular rivers, seas and oceans."

Points for Meditation

Am I wasteful? Can I use fewer plastics?

Might I contribute to or join a group that works to protect the ocean?

Have I read and prayed over the encyclical of Pope Francis Laudato si', "On Care for our Common Home?"

Contradictory messages on suicide

In July 2014, police found the body of 18-year-old Conrad Roy inside his truck in Fairhaven, Massachusetts, having died from carbon monoxide poisoning.

As the case unfolded, it became apparent that a friend of his, 17-year-old Michelle Carter, had encouraged him toward suicide. In a series of texts, she repeatedly pressured him to go through with it by sending messages like, “You keep pushing it off and say you’ll do it and sympathy as the last moment, climbing out of the truck, and that she had told him to get back in. She then listened over the phone as he succumbed to the fumes 47 minutes later.

Following a high profile trial that received extensive media coverage, Michelle was convicted of involuntary manslaughter and sentenced to 2 1/2-years behind bars, of which she has to serve a minimum of 15 months.

Prosecutors claimed that her motive may have been to gain attention and sympathy as the "grieving girlfriend." The case drew intense national and international attention, partly because it involved a relationship that had played out mostly through texts and Facebook messages. Even though Michelle and Conrad lived less than an hour apart, they rarely met in person.

As Michelle was led away from the trial in handcuffs, the court of public opinion was virtually unanimous in condemning her actions as reprehensible. Her actions and the trial proceedings, however, also opened up broader questions about provocation toward suicide in a society like ours that increasingly devalues human life.

In fact, the public reaction to Michelle’s behavior reveals a striking irony at the heart of Conrad’s suicide.

The irony involves the moral outrage that surfaced popular sentiment regarding Michelle's text messages. Similar indignation about encouraging someone to commit suicide is, paradoxically, almost entirely absent when it comes to “physician-assisted” suicide.

Michelle’s text messages embraced the same key ideas that lawmakers in nine states have now enacted through legislation, namely, that it’s sometimes allowable to encourage and participate in suicide. Most legislation, however, only permits those in the medical field, those dressed in white lab coats, as it were, to be involved.

This requirement seems quite arbitrary, of course. If the real goal is to alleviate suffering by eliminating the sufferer. After all, Michelle was convinced she was acting compassionately by assisting Conrad to escape from what she claimed was his misery, depression and intense emotional suffering.

Who is to say that Michelle was wrong if the white lab coats are right? If it were deplorable for Michelle Carter to facilitate Conrad Roy’s suicide, how can it be good for physicians and other health care workers to facilitate the suicides of their ailing patients who are at least as fragile and vulnerable as Conrad was?

This remarkable moral schizophrenia may soon be enshrined in a new piece of legislation that claims to outlaw participation in a person’s suicide. Massachusetts state lawmakers and Conrad’s family gathered in July 2019 at the Statehouse to introduce Conrad’s Law, a bill making it a crime to encourage or assist a person in taking his or her life.

On the face of it, the law obviously seems like a sensible piece of legislation, but even as lawmakers were trying to stop people from assisting at suicides like Conrad Roy’s, they were simultaneously seeking to protect medical personnel who might assist at the suicides of their patients.

The double standard was impossible to miss, with Conrad’s Law including an explicit subsection exempting those involved in physician-assisted suicide from prosecution. Even though physician-assisted suicide is not yet legal in the Massachusetts Commonwealth, another bill promoting it is under active consideration by the legislature.

Society really can’t have it both ways, glamorizing the act of suicide in some cases and demonizing it in others. By yielding to the proposition that suicide is not an evil to be repudiated, but a form of “relief” to be conferred on those who suffer, we effectively abandon our neighbors, the Conrads and countless others, in their moment of greatest need.

Focus on being a disciple ‘just for today’

There was a time, centuries ago, when one man could embrace most knowledge that was known. Such a person was called a “universal man.” Today, such a feat is impossible, even for a robot with artificial intelligence! Furthermore, it is even more impossible for us to have universal wisdom to guide us in the meaning and use of facts.

In the reading from the Book of Wisdom this week, we see how limited our human minds are compared to our Creator’s divine wisdom. We will never know the why of God’s actions in our lives. We have to trust that His wisdom is for our good.

Today’s Gospel sounds shocking when Jesus tells us to hate our parents and family if we are to be good followers. The word “hate” in Jesus’ time did not mean what we mean when we use that word. In Jesus’ time, it meant “to love less.” So, the Gospel is telling us that we must not place love of family or of material goods above love and obedience to Jesus. He should be the top priority in our lives.

Next, he warns us to plan well how we can meet the costly demands of being his followers. He mentions that no person of common sense would ever build a tower without first sitting down and checking to see if he can afford it, and if he has materials enough to finish it before he begins!

Frankly, most of us do not have enough love, enough courage, and enough grace to be His disciple all the way to the end of our lives. But God never asks the impossible. And we do have enough supplies today to be good disciples.

If we love a little bit more each day, then we’ll make it to the end.

Remember that beautiful prayer, Lord, for tomorrow and its needs, I do not pray... keep me, guide me, love me, Lord, just for today? On the road to being perfect disciples, we just have to take one day at a time. That’s all that’s needed for God to reward us with a life of unending joy.

Pope, bishops urge action to save rainforest

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – Describing the Amazon rainforest as “vital for our planet,” Pope Francis joined the regions bishops in praying for action to extinguish the massive fires burning there.

“We are all worried about the vast fires that have developed in the Amazon,” the pope said Aug. 25 after leading the recitation of the Angelus prayer. “Let us pray that with the commitment of all they will be brought under control quickly. That forest lung is vital for our planet.”

Leaders of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and the Latin American bishops’ council also urged international action to save the Amazon rainforest from the fires.

“We urge the governments of the Amazonian countries, especially Brazil and Bolivia, the United Nations and the international community, to take serious measures to save the lungs of the world,” said the statement Aug. 22 by the top officers of the council, known by its Spanish acronym, CELAM.

“What happens to the Amazon is not just a local issue, but is of global reach,” the bishops said. “If the Amazon suffers, the world suffers.”

The USCCB statement, issued Aug. 27, echoed Pope Francis’ comments and expressed “solidarity with our brother bishops in Latin America who... have expressed their desire for a prompt extinguishment of these fires.” The U.S. bishops also welcomed a decision by leaders of industrialized nations “to extend financial support for these efforts.”

The Amazon produces 20% of the world’s oxygen, according to scientific measurements.

Brazil’s space research institute, which is responsible for satellite monitoring of the Amazon, had reported that the number of wildfires, common in July and August, had reached a record number already in 2019, with 72,843 fires spotted.

The U.S. space agency, NASA, Aug. 21 and 22 released satellite imagery showing how smoke from the fires had created “a shroud that is clearly visible across much of the center of South America.”

French President Emmanuel Macron called on world leaders to place the fires at the top of their agenda as they meet in France for the Group of Seven summit starting Aug. 24. Attendees will include President Donald Trump, Macron and the leaders from Canada, Germany, Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom.

Brazilian President Jair Bolsonaro has said publicly that he believes non-governmental agencies – including Catholic-backed agencies such as the Land Pastoral and the Indigenous Missionary Council – are behind the illegal burnings because they have opposed his call for development of the rainforest. The organizations have strongly denied the allegations.

In its edition released Aug. 23, the front page of the Vatican newspaper, L’Osservatore Romano, led with two articles about the Amazon fires. The first, titled “The Amazon must be protected,” included general coverage of the fires’ scope and the alarm launched by U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres. A second article reported on the CELAM statement under the headline, “Save the forest to save the world.”

In their statement, the bishops noted that the upcoming October Synod of Bishops for the Amazon will discuss the plight of the indigenous living in the area as well as the deforestation of the region. Sixty percent of the Amazon rainforest is in Brazil.

“Hope for the proximity of the Amazon synod, convened by Pope Francis, is stained by the pain of this natural tragedy,” the bishops said. “To the brethren indigenous peoples who inhabit this beloved territory, we express all our closeness and join your voices with ours to shout to the world for solidarity and pay attention to end this devastation.”

And while the deforestation of the world’s largest tropical forest and the violence against the indigenous population there have been a great concern to the Catholic Church, the upcoming synod also has caused apprehension for the Bolsonaro government.

In February, the Brazilian government was forced to deny that it was spying, through its intelligence agency, ABIN, on more “progressive” bishops and priests working on the synod.

The government’s Institutional Security Cabinet, known as ISC, however, admitted it was worried that the meeting would be used to criticize the Bolsonaro administration’s stance on environment and indigenous rights.

“There are no general criticism of the Catholic Church. There is the functional concern of the Minister of State Chief of the Institutional Security Office for some points of the synod’s Amazon agenda that will take place at the Vatican in October this year,” said an ISC statement at the time.

CABBAGE ROLL
Norwood – The Norwood Knights of
NEW YORK (CNS) — Film fans generally and viewers of faith in particular will find much to appreciate in the heartwarming drama “The Peanut Butter Falcon” (Roadside). Themes of friendship, brotherhood and redemption are woven into a story that resonates with Gospel values.

With no family to care for him, Zak (Zack Gottsagen), a young man with Down syndrome, finds himself living in a retirement home on the Outer Banks of North Carolina. Much to the frustration of his sympathetic caregiver, Eleanor (Dakota Johnson), the state government has warehoused him there for the past two years for lack of a more suitable facility.

With the help of his feisty roommate, Carl (droll Bruce Dern), Zak escapes and takes to the road. He soon crosses paths with Tyler (Shia LaBeouf), a down-on-his-luck crab fisherman who’s being pursued by two lowlife rivals, Duncan (John Hawkes) and Ratboy (rapper Yelawolf), out to settle a score with him. Though Tyler, who’s weighed down by a tragedy in his past, is initially gruff, the two gradually bond and Tyler agrees to help Zak achieve his dream of meeting his idol, a professional wrestler known as the Salt Water Redneck (Thomas Haden Church). As the duo shares Tom and Huck-like adventures along the way to the grappler’s hometown of Aiken, South Carolina — where Zak hopes to be trained for the ring — Eleanor is on their trail.

Directors and co-writers Tyler Nilson and Michael Schwartz handle their Southern Gothic-tinted material with a light and dexterous touch. The result is an aesthetically accomplished, implicitly pro-life movie that subtly but resolutely upholds the dignity of all.

A good deal of gritty talk, however, though justified by the context, probably puts this off-limits even for older teens, despite its valuable message. Parents who do decide to give the green light, though, will find starting points for family discussions on important topics.

The film contains brief partial nudity, mature themes, a few uses of profanity, at least one rough term, pervasive crude and some crass language and a couple of obscene gestures. The Catholic News Service classification is A-III — adults. The Motion Picture Association of America rating is PG-13 — parents strongly cautioned. Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.

Supporting each other

By Molly Ryan
Mission Office

As another school year begins, I stop to recognize just how important the support I receive in my world is to me. I am grateful for so much. I have the good fortune of family, career and friends. I have a very helpful neighborhood that pitches in. I am fortunate to have the support of a solid community where my children have grown up. As a mother of two, the phrase “it takes a village” has never meant so much. I thank God every day for the support that keeps my “village” up and running. My son is away in college now, but my daughter is still at home and still needs me.

If you are blessed to have support systems in place in your world, we should also apply this is the same principle to the Mission world. Why not support the village? But what exactly is the village? In the Mission world, the village is not just the small settlement on a dried-up lakebed in Africa, a frozen tundra settlement in Mongolia or thatched huts gathered in Southeast Asia. The village is the entire global community of the universal church. I have outlined above the things I am grateful for that support me in my efforts as a working mom. Yet I am all too aware that, in the Global Village, not all are getting the support they need each day for simple and basic needs. There are children hungry, sick who need assistance and people who are homeless. There are people disenfranchised. There are those who are persecuted, cut off from the world and all it can offer for help and support.

This is where we, as Catholics in the missionary spirit, are called to step up and support. The village needs our help. Whether it is prayers, financial sacrifice or pitching in to make the world a better place, the support you can send, donate, give or offer is always appreciated and does not go unnoticed. In fact, the Pontifical Mission Societies have special responsibility in the universal church. They are under the direct canonical jurisdiction of the Pope, who reminds the faithful of their baptismal call to mission, to give basic support for more than 1,150 mission dioceses in Asia, Africa, the Pacific Islands and Latin America. As the Mission Office wraps up another successful summer of fundraising with MPDO, St. Peter Apostle and Mission Coop programs, we say thank you for the support!

So, give you support and be grateful for what you receive. Accept love of your family, friends and neighbors. Don’t forget to return the favor to those who help you. But never forget those in the Mission lands. Extraordinary Mission Month is coming this October! We will have the opportunity to strengthen our faith! There will be much to come on that topic. Remember “it takes a village” to make this all work out. Thank you from my village to yours!

Repent, pray, give up fossil fuels, pope says

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – ‘Now is the time to abandon our dependence on fossil fuels and move, quickly and decisively, toward forms of clean energy,’ Pope Francis said as he marked the World Day of Prayer for the Care of Creation.

‘We have caused a climate emergency that gravely threatens nature and life itself, including our own,’ the pope said in his message for the Sept. 1 ecumenical day of prayer.

Pope Francis urged Catholics to find a naturally beautiful place and think about how God created the universe and declared it good; then he created human beings and gave them creation ‘as a precious gift’ to safeguard.

‘Tragically, the human response to this gift has marked by sin,’ he said. Selfishness and self-interest have turned creation, which was meant to be a place of encounter and sharing, into ‘an area of competition and conflict.’

People have forgotten that they, too, are God’s creation and not lords of the universe free to exploit anything they want, the pope said.

Pollution, the incessant use of fossil fuels, deforestation and intensive farming are causing global temperatures to rise and already threaten the lives of the world’s poorest people, he said. Melting glaciers, a lack of clean drinking water, the development of more frequent super storms and ‘the considerable presence of plastics and microplastics in the oceans’ are signs of how human greed is making the planet increasingly hostile to life.

‘We have forgotten who we are: creatures made in the image of God, called to dwell as brothers and sisters in a common home,’ Pope Francis said.

‘Now is the time to discover our vocation as children of God, brothers and sisters, and stewards of creation,’ he said. ‘Now is the time to repent, to be converted.’

Pope Francis suggested Catholics join the ecumenical ‘Season of Creation’ initiative, which runs from the Sept. 1 day of prayer through the feast of St. Francis of Assisi, Oct. 4. The initiative, explained at www.seasonofcreation.org, includes prayer and practical action to clean up the environment, promote recycling and lobby governments for action to mitigate climate change.

In silence and prayer, he said, people should recognize the beauty that God has created and given to all people, but they also should pause to consider how the choices they make about what to eat, what to buy, how to travel and how they use energy and water impact God’s creation, including other people.

Pope Francis asked Catholics to listen especially to young people who are calling on everyone to make ‘courageous decisions’ and undertake ‘prophetic actions’ to fulfill longstanding promises to stop polluting the environment and to protect all life.

Politicians and government leaders also should be included in people’s prayers, he said, pointing particularly to world leaders, who must make real commitments ‘for directing the planet toward life, not death.’

The United Nations’ Climate Action Summit Sept. 23 will be especially important for reconfirming the Paris Climate Accord and taking ‘drastic measures’ to end greenhouse gas emissions and slow global warming.

‘Let us choose life,’ the pope said. ‘Let us say ‘no’ to consumerist greed and to the illusion of omnipotence, for these are the ways of death.’
