Pope Francis prays for workers, employers

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – With a statue of St. Joseph, mallet in hand, placed near the altar, Pope Francis dedicated his morning Mass May 1 to workers, especially those paid unjustly or virtually enslaved.

"Today is the feast of St. Joseph the Worker," celebrated also as International Workers Day and as Labor Day in many countries; "let us pray for all workers. All of them," the pope said at the beginning of the Mass in the chapel of the Domus Sanctae Marthae.

He prayed that no one would be lacking a job and "that all would be paid justly and may enjoy the dignity of work and the beauty of rest."

In his homily, focused on the creation story in the feast day's first reading, Genesis 1:26-2:3, Pope Francis said it was "as if" God told the first human beings: "You must do this, care for this and that; you must work to create this world with me and keep it going."

The work human beings do, he said, "is nothing other than the continuation of God's work. Human work is the vocation received from God."

"Work is what makes the person similar to God because with work one is a creator, is capable of creating, of creating many things, including creating a family to keep going," the pope said. "And this gives dignity to the human person. The dignity that makes one resemble God. The dignity of labor."

Unfortunately, he said, the dignity of labor is "often trampled on," and not just by slavery in the past centuries, which everyone recognizes as "barbaric."

"Even today there are many slaves, many men and women who are not free to work – they are forced to work to survive and nothing more," he said.
We’re a family at war

We’re waging war at our home in Moira. It’s the battle with Bambi. Our property is bordered by woods on two sides. It’s not uncommon to see deer, rabbits, skunks and other woodland animals crossing through our backyard and/or picking through our compost pile for scraps. While we enjoy watching the wildlife, when the deer ate the tops of my raspberry bushes last year, it was act of aggression that couldn’t go unanswered.

This year, finding ourselves with a lot of time at my husband and I decided to build a defensive perimeter – ok, it’s really a cheap seven-foot tall net – to keep the deer out of my berries. We decided to increase the size of the enclosure to accommodate a garden, something we’ve said we wanted in the past, but the deer/wildlife prevented us from pursuing.

Adam and I spent Saturday afternoon hammering posts into the ground, laying down weed fabric on the recently-rototilled soil (I’m a lazy gardener; I don’t want to spend all summer weeding), affixing netting to the posts and the ground, and tying ribbons to the netting to make it visible to the deer.

Working on the garden after editing most of the content of this paper, I had St. Joseph on my mind. I was reflecting on how blessed I am to have a husband who emulates this model spouse and father. Adam is my constant companion and partner. Even in simple ways, he’s my protector (I couldn’t tell you how many times he climbed a ladder or tied the ribbons really low to the ground to save me and my junky hips the repetitive up and down movements). For both me and Jake, our son, Adam is a provider and compassionate caregiver. His consistency, fidelity and even temper makes him the pillar of our family, much like St. Joseph is the pillar of families. Adam makes me want to be a better, holier people, and he helps me to do that.

There’s no one with whom I’d rather go into battle. Even if we’re just waging war with Bambi.

During this Easter Season, the first reading at each Mass is from the Acts of the Apostles.

As you remember, the Acts of the Apostles is a New Testament Book written by St. Luke, the same Luke who wrote the third Gospel. The Acts of the Apostles tells the stories of the early Christians during the time after the Resurrection of Jesus. We are told how the apostles joined the early Christians into a strong community, especially after Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit came upon them.

Today, the reading from Acts tells the story of Stephen. We know that in the life of the Christian communities, the apostles taught about Jesus and worked to gather and distribute food the needy of the community. As the community grew larger, the apostles decided to ask the community to choose seven men to help serve them. We are told that this was to give the apostles the opportunity to devote to prayer and ministry of the word. The seven chosen were Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas and Nicholas of Antioch. We are told that the apostles prayed over them and laid hands on them. These seven are considered the first deacons of the Church.

Deacons have always been a part of the Catholic Church. In the early Church, the deacons continued as the first seven to do works of charity and help the needy. Stephen was also a teacher, however, the leaders of the Hebrew community could not accept his message about Jesus, and he became the first Christian martyr.

For many centuries, the order of deacon was no longer a separate state in the Church. A deacon was ordained to a temporary state on the way to the ordination for priesthood. The Second Vatican Council restored the order of the permanent diaconate.

During this time when our churches are closed, there is no public Mass on Sunday, no public Mass each day. Several priests here in our diocese and others throughout the country stream the Mass – that is they are able to make a video of the Mass and put it up on YouTube, their websites or social media. Each day, Pope Francis’ Mass is streamed and can be found on this YouTube. It is a very special opportunity to join with the Holy Father. There is a special holiness and peace to be able to pray the Mass with Pope Francis. There is a real sense of unity that can be noticed. No matter where the Mass comes from, the prayers are the same as those of Pope Francis, and the Scripture readings are the same also.

I offered Mass this morning with the Sisters of St. Joseph, and I recognized that the prayers I offered were the same as those of Pope Francis. This is rather special. There is closeness, unity as I celebrate Mass with the same words and message as the Holy Father.
The following is Bishop Terry R. LaValley’s homily for the consecration of the Diocese of Ogdensburg to St. Joseph on May 1, the Feast of St. Joseph the Worker.

During the ten years that I have been bishop, we’ve had to close five parish churches that were under the patronage of St. Joseph. They were in Treadwell Mills, Mooers, Massena, Bombay and Malone. With this special consecration of the Diocese of Ogdensburg to St. Joseph today, I want to assure the parishioners of these former parishes, indeed, remind all of us, that St. Joseph has not become a forgotten saint. Back in 2017, I consecrated the Diocese to the Immaculate Heart of Mary. God desires that all children be entrusted to the loving and caring heart of a mother and a father. Mary is our spiritual mother. Joseph is our spiritual father.

Just a few years ago St. Joseph’s name was added to the Eucharistic Prayer for every Mass, in acknowledgement of his importance in the communion of saints and of how vital the Church considers his intercession today. My friends, it is time for our total consecration to St. Joseph. What better place for that to happen than at the Motherhouse of our very own Sisters of St. Joseph!

Today the Church celebrates the Memorial of St. Joseph the Worker. After much prayer and reflection, I decided that you and I, the entire Church of the North Country will put St. Joseph to work, particularly this next year as the Diocese of Ogdensburg is consecrated to this holy man.

Our Diocese is placing a lot on his plate. We place before him some urgent needs of our Church, our families, and marriages, our communities, our country, nations of the world, and all our hurting sisters and brothers. We will “go to Joseph.” Yes, on this feast of St. Joseph the Worker, we will put St. Joseph to work for us.

The urgency of the moment is part of the reason why I believe the Lord put on my heart the desire to consecrate this local Church in a special way to St. Joseph at this time. Now, more than ever, we need to go to St. Joseph! We need to pray fervently for his intercession, particularly under the titles that we will soon voice in the Litany of St. Joseph about which Father Donald Calloway wrote extensively.

Let us reflect on some of them and consider how they speak loudly of a need we experience today. Our reflection should begin with Joseph, Hope of the Sick. Those of us who have made a pilgrimage to St. Joseph’s Oratory in Montreal are aware of St. Joseph’s powerful intercessory prayer for healing. The Oratory’s walls, lined with crutches, give tangible testimony to the effectiveness of his prayer.

As Hope of the Sick and Comfort of the Afflicted, we rely on St. Joseph’s intercession for those suffering from the corona virus, for those who struggle with cancer, diabetes, Alzheimer’s disease, Parkinson’s disease, mental illness, alcohol and substance abuse, and all debilitating diseases. Joseph, Hope of the Sick and Comfort of the Afflicted, pray for us!

Another title in our Litany that causes me to go to St. Joseph is that of Protector of Holy Church. Today, not only do we experience terrible polarization in our society, tragically such divisiveness has infiltrated our Church. Extreme polarities from both ends of the ecclesial and ideological spectrum do little to build up the Body of Christ. They threaten the peace and unity that our Savior prayed for.

As the Terror of Demons, we seek St. Joseph’s protection against the wiles of Satan as the evil of sexual abuse by Church leaders and the mishandling of such misconduct has caused great pain in the lives of so many. Joseph, Protector of Holy Church and Terror of Demons, pray for us!

We, also, plan to put St. Joseph to work as the Zealous Defender of Christ. It is no secret that today society has, in so many ways, pushed Christ to the margins of our daily lives or completely off the radar screen. We pray that Joseph, who brought his Family, Jesus and Mary, on the perilous journey to Egypt and back, will help us bring Jesus back into our families during these troublesome times. We pray that St. Joseph will help us in our continuing efforts to address our diocesan pastoral priorities of creating a culture of vocations, strengthening faith formation in family life and building parishes with living stones. St. John Paul II wrote: It is precisely the intrepid faith of St. Joseph that the Church needs today in order to courageously dedicate herself to the urgent task of the new evangelization. Joseph, Zealous Defender of Christ, pray for us!

We especially entreat St. Joseph, Model of Workers at this time when so many have lost their jobs because of the pandemic. Breadwinners are anxious about their ability to provide the basics for loved ones at home. Joseph grew up in the same condition as the vast majority of people. He wasn’t raised with wealth, prestige or influence but in ordinary obscurity. “Is this not the carpenter’s son?” The worries of providing the basics for Jesus at his home, gives Joseph the attentive ears and understanding heart that today’s breadwinner’s need in these uncertain times. St. Joseph, Model of Workers, Pray for us and our loved ones who are without a job.

Joseph, Spouse of the Mother of God: Under this title I am reminded of the equal respect and dignity due every wife by her husband. Too often, not only in other societies, but even in the Western world, wives suffer emotional, sexual, and physical abuse. Too often, they are taken for granted. As we near the day in which we will honor our moms on Mother’s Day, albeit taking her out for dinner isn’t an easy option this year, we pray that their husbands always be true soul companions and loving sources of support and respect. We go to Joseph, the Spouse of the Mother of God as the model for all husbands.

I know that we are placing a heavy burden on St. Joseph as we consecrate this year to him. For Jesus, Joseph set the model of manhood in service to the will of God. We know that he is well-equipped to receive our prayers and present them to his Son, our Lord. Perhaps, each month during the next year, we might take one of the titles of Joseph of this Litany and apply it to our personal lives, those of our family, community, and our Church.

My sisters and brothers, Joseph the Worker will earn his saintly stripes as we begin this special year in our local Church and place before him the desires of our hearts so that this carpenter might present them to Jesus, drawing us closer to Him and to one another. Good St. Joseph, pray for us!
Journeying through life with St. Joseph

Bishop LaValley has just consecrated our Diocese to the intercession and protection of St. Joseph, spouse of the Blessed Virgin Mary and foster father of Jesus, the Son of God.

How good and how comforting to know that we have such a powerful friend in Heaven! Especially in these troubled times, it is a special consolation and a continuing source of hope and joy for all of us.

I couldn’t help but think of the many ways St. Joseph has played a vital role in my own life. I remember, several years ago as other family members and I were cleaning out the attic, coming across a small box of letters and news clippings and invitations to various family events. It was kept in a drawer of an old bureau, along with other “family treasures”! Anyway, one of the notes was written to my Mom, who was in the hospital after just having given birth to me. My Grandma Morgan wrote to my Mom, saying that we had never had a “Joseph” in the family and what a good name it was. I agree whole-heartedly! St. Joseph, the just man who watched over Mary and Jesus, is the Patron of Families and Protector of the Church. How blessed to carry his name throughout life!

When our family moved to Watertown, we became good friends of the Sisters of St. Joseph. My sisters and brothers and I were enrolled in Holy Family School, and then in Immaculate Heart Academy, which became Immaculate Heart Central. During the school year, the Sisters were our teachers; during the summers, the Sisters would visit homes and prepare for the next school year by meeting families. My parents always appreciated the Sisters and several of them became very close to our family. I have also been privileged to work with several of the Sisters in various parish assignments and in Chancery work over the years. Really amusing was when Sister Marie Cordata, whom I had known when I was a student at IHC, became Principal of St. Mary’s Academy in Champaign. We often laughed about pretending to know what we were doing...she as Principal and I as Pastor!

We belonged to Holy Family Church and sat on the “Holy Family side,” where there was a large painting of the Holy Family over the confessionals. It was a family scene at Nazareth, and became a constant reminder to be our own “holy family” in Watertown. A younger brother, Tom, was born with spinal bifida in 1961. He had several surgeries in Montreal, cared for by the Shriners at the Royal Victoria Hospital. We had many trips to Montreal to visit Tom. There we found the Oratory on Mount Royal, built by St. Brother André Bessette, in honor of St. Joseph. I remember being so impressed with the long hallway filled with candles and with the discarded crutches, wheelchairs, canes and braces that were left behind by those who were healed through the intercession of St. Joseph. St. Joseph was great...he took care of people and got things done! And he worked through a little Brother, a porter who welcomed people and prayed for them.

St. Joseph accompanies us on our pilgrimage of faith. He encourages us to stay close to Jesus, to listen as God speaks to our hearts, and to be open to the amazing ways God wants to be present to us. St. Joseph, a man of trust and humility and obedience, watches over our families and our Church as we walk the ways of faith, hope and love.

Think of the love he had for Mary and for Jesus; how he worked to provide for them and protect them; how he answered God’s call throughout his life, with complete abandon and a desire to do only what God wanted. Isn’t that a wonderful way to live?

St. Joseph is a great patron for all of us. Pray for us, St. Joseph, protector and guide and friend. Make us humble, patient, pure and wholly obedient to God, who saves us in Jesus, the Risen Lord!
Father Jonas to move to Pa., Father Frank arrives

WATERTOWN—Effective June 29, Father Jonas Tandayu, a Missionary of the Sacred Heart and pastor of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart in Watertown, has accepted a transfer to Holy Family Parish in Nazareth, Pennsylvania. Father Frank Natale, also a Missionary of the Sacred Heart and currently parochial vicar at Holy Family Parish in Nazareth, will become pastor of Sacred Heart in Watertown.

Father Tandayu spent a year at Holy Family Parish in Nazareth before becoming pastor of Sacred Heart in Watertown in January 2013.

The Pennsylvania parish has 2,000 families, an elementary school, a large religious education program and has many active parish groups.

Father Natale, 41, was born in Canton, Ohio. He was ordained a Missionary of the Sacred Heart in 2013.

“Father Frank (Natale) will officially become pastor of (Our Lady of the Sacred Heart) on June 22, 2020,” wrote Father Richard Kennedy, provincial superior of the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart in a letter to Sacred Heart parishioners. “Father Frank has the qualities to become a well-beloved pastor. I know you will give him a true 'Sacred Heart' welcome. Please pray for him as well as for all the MSC priests and brothers.”

In his letter officially appointing Father Natale to the position of pastor at Sacred Heart, Bishop Terry R. LaValley thanked the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart for the service of Father Tandayu. “Allow me to thank you for the outstanding pastoral ministry the people of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart Church have received under the leadership of Father Jonas Tandayu over the past seven years,” Bishop LaValley wrote. “His fatherly presence as pastor has greatly benefited the people of the parish and his insights on the diocesan level, including those shared on the Council of Priests, have been greatly appreciated. While he will be missed, I have no doubt the people in his next assignment will be greatly blessed.”

The assignment changes were necessitated by the retirement of Father Joseph Tobias, current pastor of Holy Family Parish in Nazareth, Pennsylvania. Father Tobias’ retirement comes after 50 years of priestly ministry.

CONGRATULATIONS Father Robinson on 40 Years of Faithful Service!

Dear Friends in Christ:

As faithful disciples of Christ and as a Church in mission, we work together to respond to those in need and offer guidance through quality services designed to respect the dignity of each person. Inspired by the Gospel, the many programs and services that are offered by Catholic Charities throughout our diocese focus on building a just and compassionate society that embraces the gifts given to us by Christ.

Especially today, when the North Country is facing the unprecedented challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic, the response of our diocese and by Catholic Charities to the poor and underprivileged has become critically important. With unemployment and daily poverty reaching more deeply into our North Country communities, our charitable response needs to be greater than ever.

As always, Catholic Charities depends on our financial support to continue reaching out to our neighbor in need. As your Bishop and chairperson of the Board of Trustees of Catholic Charities, I ask you to consider making a generous donation to this vital ministry.

The Mother’s Day Annual Appeal for Catholic Charities has traditionally taken place in our parishes on Mother’s Day weekend. However, COVID-19 makes it unlikely that a pew collection can take place on Mother’s Day this year. Instead, this collection will be held on Father’s Day, Sunday, June 21st when we are hopeful that all our Catholic churches across the diocese will be re-opened for Sunday celebrations and public worship.

Let us continue to Give Help and Create Hope for the many families of the North Country that we serve. Thank you for continuing the work of Christ on earth.

Gratefully yours in Christ,

Most Reverend Terry R. LaValley
Bishop of Ogdensburg

PLEASE NOTE:
Due to COVID-19 restrictions the pew collection normally held on Mother’s Day weekend is now scheduled be held Father’s Day weekend. HOWEVER you may still mail in your donation prior to the collection weekend by sending in the form on the next page or by doing an online donation at www.cathcharities.org

Mother’s Day Annual Appeal
Please help us reach our GOAL: $ 165,000

This year’s special collection will aid families, victims, and anyone affected by the COVID-19 pandemic.

Dear Friends of Catholic Charities,

Celebrating Catholic Charities over 100 years of service is a reminder of our Church’s consistent presence in the North Country and its response to the needs of the most vulnerable members of our communities. We continue to provide programs and services that address the critical and unmet needs of our brothers and sisters.

Catholic Charities has never done this alone and cannot do so now especially during the COVID-19 pandemic. We need our volunteers, our supporters and our benefactors to be part of this mission of charity and justice. Your financial gift to Catholic Charities provides the resources that allows us to continue our work and respond to those in need. Your support provides:

- Helping needy families with COVID-19 crisis & seeking urgent medical attention
- Aid to families struggling to buy groceries and pay for clothing
- Casework services to individuals struggling with recent unemployment
- Assistance to members of our senior community dealing with poverty and isolation

During the past year we have opened a soup kitchen, food pantries, transitional homeless housing and outreach services to migrant workers and their families, all through your generous help and support.

Without the ability to do home mailings or pew collections (until Father’s Day) we rely on your help through your mail response or online donations on our website www.cathcharities.org.

These and thousands of individuals come to Catholic Charities across our Diocese of Ogdensburg; due to your financial gift, Catholic Charities can be there for them. Through providing these individuals with help...we create hope. Your financial gift will continue to provide essential programs and services throughout all eight counties served by Catholic Charities. On behalf of those who are hungry and homeless, people who are alone and isolated, and families that struggle with poverty...Thank You!

A ‘pause that refreshes’

One commercial for a leading soft drink advertises it as the “Pause that refreshes!”

While on a hot summer’s day a cold drink may refresh us for the moment, the refreshment quickly fades. The current “stay-at-home” situation — while causing much stress, uncertainty and suffering — may also give us a little more time for a “Pause that refreshes” not only our senses but our whole being.

As we enter into this month of May, the earth is awakening all around us. Often I find that I am so frantically trying to keep up with a busy “to do list,” I don’t even notice spring unfolding before my very eyes. Yet I know that many of the saints and mystics, like St. Francis of Assisi, St. Hildegard of Bingen, Thomas Merton, St. Theresa of the Little Flower, noticed the magnificence of even the tiniest particle of Creation and gave praise to the Creator. Jesus himself must have been very much in touch with the beauty of the natural world around him. He would have prayed the Psalms that are filled with a sense of wonder and praise. He also recognized creation often offers lessons about life. He called attention to the birds of the air, the lilies of the field, mustard seed, grain of wheat, vine and the branches, and what they had to teach us about life.

We read in Laudato Si: On Care for Our Common Home. (para. 85) that “God has written a precious book whose letters are the multitude of created things present in the universe.” St. John Paul II (Catechism 30 January 2002) in the words of the Canadian Bishops “From panoramic vistas to the tiniest living form, nature is a constant source of wonder and awe. It is also continuing revelation of the divine.” Canadian Bishops (Pastoral Letter 4 October 2014)

One gift that I can thank the coronavirus situation today is more time to “pause and reflect” on the unwritten “book of Creation,” and enjoy the unfolding of springtime with all of my senses while listening for hidden messages.

Editor’s Note: This article is part of an ongoing series highlighting Walking with Moms in Need: A Year of Service.

Evangelum Vitae includes a reflection on the murder of Abel by his brother Cain. God asks Cain, “What have you done?” Obviously, this is a rhetorical question meant to lead Cain to think about the significance of his act. Cain had committed a grave sin which could send him to Hell.

God asks us the same question in Matthew 19, the story of the final judgement of the world in which God separates the nations like a shepherd separates the sheep and the goats. The question might instead be worded “What have you done for me lately?” Sins of omission, not doing things we should, are equally capable of sending us to Hell.

Some people who engage in conversations on life issues focus on the sin of commission of those complicit in the act of abortion. The law on the sins of omission by the community who neglect to provide support for the mother and child either before or after the child is born.

In both cases, in sins of commission and omission, we fail to act in a way that shows loving care for our brothers or sisters. Clearly, we are our brothers’ and sisters’ keepers.

St. Joseph is a fantastic model of someone who cared for a pregnant woman in need. He was betrothed to Mary, but the child was not his. Initially, he decided to quietly divorce Mary because he was unwilling to expose her to shame. What if he had no to the mercy that God put in his heart? What would the consequences have been for Mary, for Jesus, or for all of us? The first step in Joseph’s decision process was to do no harm, but that wasn’t enough. Joseph was a man of prayer. In his discernment about how to respond to this challenging situation he sought the will of God.

Open to the further promptings of God in his mind and heart, dreaming, he took Mary to be his wife and her unborn child to be his child. He did not support them from afar. He brought them close, giving a name to the child, and for the rest of his life taking on the responsibility to care for and protect them.

The parallel to Adam is striking. Adam had specific God-given duties. He was the name giver, and he was to care for and protect the garden in which grew the tree of life. Adam and Eve failed, and both tried to evade responsibility. The consequences of their moral failure and their attempt to evade responsibility are experienced throughout every generation.

Fortunately, the Holy Family gives us a better model to emulate in our complete yes to loving God and neighbor.

What if Joseph tried to evade responsibility, or what if he gave a limited commitment only? He could have said, “Okay, I’ll support her up until Bethlehem, then I’m done.” Is it enough to only provide the support that helps a woman choose to give birth? No, it’s better for a community to draw the mother and child in close, to recognize their dignity and honor the precious gift of life, to form a relationship which communicates “You and your family are a part of us. We are in this for the long haul and we will do this together.”

These kinds of relationships are formed within the parish community.

Bishop LaValley, along with the other bishops of the United States, is encouraging the people of the Diocese of Ogdensburg to participate in Walking with Moms in Need: A Year of Service. This program aims at highlighting the pregnant women and parenting moms in our parishes, identifying resources available within local communities, and connecting these women to the resources they need. The program invites us to care for, protect and welcome new life in the womb by caring for, supporting, welcoming and serving pregnant women, especially those facing difficulties or challenging circumstances.

We can be like St. Joseph by responding to mom’s and their children in love, whether it be welcoming them at church, inviting them to events, being friendly, taking an interest in their lives and their child(ren). Doing these things can open the door for us to learn what needs they may have and respond to them. Arranging play dates between our children and/or grandchildren and theirs. Having them over for coffee or a meal. Praying for them and their specific needs, connecting them to the available resources, or spending time with them so they don’t feel overwhelmed and isolated are great ways to care for them. Motherhood itself can be so daunting at times especially if a mom feels alone. By responding in simple ways when we see a need we can extend God’s love to them.

What if St. Joseph said ‘no?’
May 1. The sparse, 37-minute ceremony at Our Lady of the Angels Cathedral in Los Angeles was livestreamed on Facebook, YouTube and the websites of the Los Angeles Archdiocese and the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops. Alternating between English and Spanish, Archbishop Gomez said: "In this difficult time we turn to the Blessed Virgin Mary, mother of the church. She intercedes with her Son for all who are affected in this way by the pandemic. . . . We implore her maternal care for her children." Archbishop Gomez noted Mary’s history in the United States. "The first missionaries came to this country under the mantle of Our Lady of Guadalupe. Later, the bishops consecrated her as patroness of the United States of America," he said. "The Virgin Mary has accompanied this great nation since our beginnings.”

Few sermons mention abortion in U.S. Christianity, Pew finds
WASHINGTON (CNS) — The percentage of sermons about abortion is in the single digits, according to a Pew Research Center study, the results of which were released April 29. Even a mention of abortion in a sermon is rare, according to the study. Pew analyzed nearly 50,000 sermons shared online or livestreamed by more than 6,000 U.S. churches and delivered between April 7 and June 1, 2019, a time frame that included Easter. Five percent of Catholic homilies analyzed during the study period mentioned abortion, which topped the national average of 4%. Other Christians were grouped into "mainline Protestant," "evangelical Protestant" and "historically black Protestant." Nineteen percent of Catholic congregations heard abortion mentioned in at least one sermon during the study period, which matched the national average. Evangelicals led the way with 22%, with mainline Protestants trailing at 10%. The percentage of Catholics hearing about abortion may be surprising, according to Dennis Quinn, lead researcher for the study.

Polls: Faith is getting Americans through crisis
WASHINGTON (CNS) — Two separate polls show that Americans are relying more on their faith to help persevere through the coronavirus pandemic.

The Pew Research Center, in a survey released April 30, showed that nearly one-fourth of all Americans say their faith has grown stronger during the pandemic, while only 2% said it had grown weaker.

Catholics, according to Pew, are very much in line with the overall survey results. Among Catholic respondents, 27% said their faith had grown stronger with 2% saying it had gotten weaker. In addition, 63% said their faith had not changed much at all, and another 7% said the question was not applicable because "I am not a religious person and this hasn't changed."

A poll by Fordham University released April 28 showed that Americans are being helped by their religious or spiritual faith during the pandemic, and the more often they go to church, the more they feel it has helped.

For those who go to church regularly, 68% said they have been "helped a lot," and another 22% said they have been "helped somewhat." For those who say they go to church frequently, 41% said they were helped a lot, with 45% reporting they had been helped somewhat. Even a majority of those who say they rarely go to church said faith has helped — 23% a lot and 32% somewhat.

Among all respondents, 35% said they have been helped a lot and 29% said they had been helped somewhat, while 34% said they had not been helped.

There may be a touch of irony in the polls' results as significant percentages of Americans are reporting their faith has helped get them through a tough time yet they are unable to attend worship services. The Fordham poll showed 38% of Americans are attending less frequently, while 56% report no change. Just over a quarter are watching services more online or on television now than before the outbreak.

Regular churchgoers reported the largest attendance drop-off, with 67% saying they are attending much less often, 4% attending somewhat less often and 19% reporting no change. To compensate, 55% said they are watching online or televised services more than usual.

In the Fordham poll, 62% of Catholics said they had been helped at least somewhat by their faith. By comparison, 95% of evangelicals reported they had been helped at least somewhat, and just over three-fourths of mainline Protestants reported the same.

Pew's numbers found that African Americans reported the biggest increase in faith at 41%, compared to 40% for Hispanics and 20% for whites. Older Americans likewise found their faith increasing, as nearly 30% of all Americans ages 50-up reported increased faith. Women's numbers were nearly twice as big as men's, 30% compared to 18%.

Monika McDermott, Fordham professor of political science, told Catholic News Service that her students in a public opinion and survey research certification program had designed an entirely different poll before the coronavirus started shutting down much of U.S. society. "We met over Zoom and worked remotely" to put together the new survey, she said.
Tensions were bound to

While others were

Gentiles of Greek

Origin. When food

Was distributed to

The widows, those of Greek origin complained that

They were often

Passed over. What could

Have been a serious division

velopment in its growth.

Tensions were bound to

A rise since each group had Different ways of thinking and acting. Very wisely, the Twelve decided to formally establish a new ministry of “table servers” (later known as deacons), so that they themselves could devote themselves entirely to prayer and preaching. They imposed hands on seven men of outstanding reputation. Actually, when the Holy Spirit came upon them, they did much more than wait on tables. In this way, God used a crisis in charity to further the effectiveness of the Church in spreading the word.

Let’s compare this with our Church today. Because of the shortage of priests, the role of deacons and commissioned lay ministers is emerging as an ever-more integral part of the Church of the 21st century. The Holy Spirit is urgently calling more and more faithful Catholics to assume a new level of leadership in the life of their local parishes. And, despite the scandal of sexual abuse toward children on the part of clergy, we find a new level of hope from the guidance of Pope Francis. Our own Bishop Terry LaValley, after a year’s study and consultation, has set forth an inspired and challenging vision of the future for the diocese of Ogdensburg.

The second reading from the first-letter of St. Peter uses the image of “stone” or “rock.” Peter, referring to Isaiah’s prophecy, tells us that God the Father long ago had established His Son, Jesus, as the “cornerstone, chosen and precious.” Peter, with warm and welcoming tone, urges us to come with hope and trust to the living stone of salvation, and there to become ourselves a holy temple. Of course, there’s a price to pay. Through our own sufferings, we offer sacrifice and praise to the Father along with the Son. All of this happens through our baptisms and the power of the Holy Spirit.

Then comes a warning. Just as many have rejected this rock of salvation to their own condemnation, so too, if we attempt to bypass Christ, then we will ourselves stumble and fall. Peter quotes Isaiah as his authority for referring to Christ as a stumbling block to those who reject Him. All this will become clear on the day of judgment. The Gospel is taken from the wonderful farewell address of Jesus to his apostles at the Last Supper. Here, he tells them not to be afraid, for after much trial, the kingdom with its many dwelling places will be theirs. A good teacher loves students who ask a lot of questions. We’re forever indebted to Thomas and Philip for their proding of Jesus for more explanation about the way to the Kingdom. In answer, Jesus gives us one of his most quotable quotes: “I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to the Father except through me.” When we’re confused about decisions we should make, Jesus Himself will show us the Way. When we don’t know what is true and what is false, what is right and what is wrong, the Holy Spirit through the Church will enlighten us.

The effects of the upheaval of our society has had severe repercussions of the daily ministry of our parishes. We pray that we will soon be able to open our churches for daily Mass and the reception of the sacraments. On this Mother’s Day, when we honor all mothers, we beg our mother Mary to bring back normal ministry and full churches.

Counting our blessings

Louisa Madill, wife of Dr. Grant Madill, noted on October 13 that, “For the first time in the history of Ogdensburg, no church bells rang today—all closed on account of influenza.” I found that quote in an article on-line by Julie Madlin written in 2016. The article was entitled, Ogdensburg and the 1918 Influenza Pandemic. Louisa had her facts straight, but the why is even more ominous, and familiar.

“In the fall of 1918, the influenza epidemic reached vast proportions in the diocese. As many of the people of the diocese were stricken with the flu, places of public worship were temporarily closed.” That information comes to us from Sister Christine Taylor, SSJ in her wonderful centennial history of the Diocese published in 1972.

Sister Christine’s history is full of little tidbits of information that make me smile and sometimes frown. Like the news on page 79 that the 1918 Spanish Flu (that is what we called that pandemic) claimed the lives of 10 of our priests and that left Bishop Gabriels and his Auxiliary Bishop Conroy with “parishes without pastors.” Saints preserve us, as my great-grandmother would say. All of this got me thinking about histories. I once asked Sister Christine if she was working on a sequel to her History of Catholicism in the North Country. As I recall, her “no” was offered without hesitation but politely and with a smile. Perhaps we can use this space to encourage someone to carry-on from where Sister left off. Bishop Brzana was our Shepherd in 1972. That was the year the Diocese of Ogdensburg celebrated its Centennial anniversary. Four other men have followed Bishop Brzana in the Episcopal Chair of Ogdensburg. So much has happened in our diocese since 1972. Worth more than a mention is that history will be the restoration of the Permanent Diaconate in our Diocese by Bishop Brzana in 1977.

Deacon Kevin Mastellon ministers in Watertown. He is the Director of Permanent Deacons for the Diocese of Ogdensburg.
Going to the chapel

By Father Dan Chapin, MM

It was a Saturday afternoon in April 2017, the day before Palm Sunday. I was preparing to preside at a wedding in the Chapel of the Exaltation, one of two chapels of the Parish of Our Lady of La Salette, where I had been serving since October of the year before. These chapels serve parishioners in different neighborhoods of the parish. The parish is located near a lagoon in the southern zone of the city of Cochabamba in central Bolivia; the city is nestled in an agricultural valley of the Andes Mountains. The couple, Daygoth and Fabiola, were to be accompanied by their five-year old daughter, who was a kindergarten student. The great majority of couples celebrate the sacrament of matrimony having already started raising a family; couples must show proof of their civil marriage before celebrating a church wedding.

When I arrived at the chapel, the groom and his witness (padrino) were there; the bride and her witness (madrina) had not yet arrived (some traditions cut across cultures!). The candles had been lit, and beautiful floral arrangements had been placed. White, satin cloth covered the chairs where the couple and the witnesses were to be seated; both sides of the main aisle were decorated with flowers.

Two women, serving as chapel sacrists, were trying to put on special music for the bride's entrance, but they didn't know how to do it and neither did I; so they called upon one of the photographers who seemed to have it ready to go, but it never did really work. The ceremony began (without music). Scriptures were read, and a brief homily was offered. The Marriage Rite followed. The couple exchanged vows; rings were blessed and exchanged; coins were blessed and given to the husband, who then presented them to his wife as an expression of mutual sharing and support; a long necklace was then placed on the newly-married couple linking them in a bond of eternal love; and finally holy water, a symbol of baptism, was sprinkled over the couple and their witnesses. Petitions were offered, concluding with the Lord's Prayer; a sign of peace (kiss) ensued, and Communion was distributed; the ceremony concluded with the final blessing (and no music). Outside, photos were taken; and small, white, round confetti was placed gently on the heads of the newlyweds and their witnesses by the guests; it was almost like an anointing of the Lord's grace to them.

Thus it was that Daygoth and Fabiola celebrated the Sacrament of Matrimony in the eyes of God and in the midst of the Christian community at the Chapel of the Exaltation, one fine April day in the Year of Our Lord 2017.

‘My greatest inheritance’

By Suzanne Pietropaoli

FORT COVINGTON – While many “cradle Catholics” wander away from their early faith experiences, Kathleen (Mainville) Lauzon could not be more grateful for hers.

“My Catholic faith is my greatest inheritance,” the life-long St. Mary’s parishioner relates. “My father and mother loved and lived their faith, which they shared with their seven living children. They also connected us with our little brother, Michael, who lived only three days. Mom taught us to ‘talk to little Michael’ about any issues, problems, joys. This very personal relationship with him made God, the angels, and the saints very real to me.”

Similarly, growing up a “cradle Catholic” Lauzon considered joining their ranks, until her mother pointed out that her daughter’s difficulties with obedience would make religious life especially challenging. Yet her career choice would ultimately be shaped by her faith.

“I knew that, by the grace of God, practicing the corporal and spiritual works of mercy would help me get to heaven, which I knew was the ultimate purpose of my life,” she said. “So, after high school I went to CVPH Hospital School of Nursing in Plattsburgh and earned my R.N. in 1976. I started working in maternity at Massena Memorial..."

Hospital, and after Michael and I were married in 1980, I became a school nurse in Fort Covington.

Between her growing family and her nursing work, Lauzon's days overflowed with opportunities to nurture, counsel, and comfort. For her, each person, each patient, is a gift from God and a possibility not to be missed.

"I try to live the charism of the smile," she explains, "sharing God's love with everyone I encounter by a smile or a kind word. I pray that they will see Him in me as I look for Him in each one of them."

Always seeking to follow God by serving Him in others, Lauzon remembers 1996, when after 20 years of nursing, she felt called to become a nurse practitioner. It was a pivotal moment. The training schedule would be grueling: four days a week at Community General Hospital in Syracuse, two days a week at a local doctor's office, a steady diet of tests and exams – and of course, the commuting. Characteristically, Lauzon set out to discern whether God really wanted her to follow this daunting path.

"After consultation with my husband and my parents, and much prayer, I filled out the application to the program," she said. "I needed to be sure that this was God's will and not some sort of prideful desire on my part. So, I took my application packet to the church and laid it at the foot of the altar and prayed, 'Thy will be done.'

I was accepted even without an interview. It was certainly the most difficult year of my life and that of my husband and children."

"But there were also many profound, grace-filled moments," continues Lauzon. "Although it broke my heart to leave my family every Sunday afternoon, God was never far away. I remember developing a habit of saying the Rosary along the way, offering it for the intentions of those in various houses I passed on my route. Even though I did not know those people, I could pray for them just as I prayed for my own family. I also realized that I could offer my tears to our Blessed Mother who could offer them to Jesus, as a way of slaking His thirst on the Cross."

During the 24 years that she has worked as a family nurse practitioner at Leroux Health Center, Lauzon has continued to respect the both the spiritual and physical needs of her patients.

"When people are ill, they are at their most vulnerable," she said. "Like Christ alone in the Garden on Holy Thursday, they are often alone, scared, knowing the pain that is ahead for them. When I have to tell someone they have cancer, it is easy to see Christ in them and to care for Him in them. I do tell my patients that I will pray for them, and they are appreciative."

Now, amid Covid-19 concerns, Lauzon notes that she is seeing increased anxiety in her patients.

"People are worried and afraid," she said. "It is difficult to try to take care of people without touching them. People need physical contact, and right now that is impossible."

This level of caring could not have been sustained for so long without God's grace, Lauzon affirms.

"The most Holy Eucharist has always been my sustenance; His Body and Blood restore and strengthen me," she said. "I also love exposition, and the opportunity to be quiet in front of the Blessed Sacrament. Though it can be hard to quiet my mind, that is the best place to do it – to approach our Lord in conversation. The saints and angels are still my friends, especially St. Michael the Archangel."

Another constant has been Lauzon's service to her parish: directing the choir, serving as a lector and Eucharistic minister, teaching religious education classes, training altar servers, and chairing the parish vocations committee.

"Today, Lauzon expresses gratitude for the blessings of nearly 40 years of marriage, for the couple's "three adult children, one great son-in-law, and a beautiful granddaughter."

Of her remarkable passion for sharing God's love with others, she says simply: "I am merely His creation. I just try to use the gifts He has given me for His greater honor and glory."
