Three new priests

On Saturday, May 29, three new priests of the diocese, Father John K. Ojuok, Father Fernando V. Solomon Jr. and Father Matthew S. Conger, were ordained by Bishop Terry R. LaValley at St. Mary’s Cathedral. Read Bishop LaValley’s homily on Page 3 and see additional photos on Page 4.

Pope: Darkness does not mean devil has won

VATICAN CITY (CNS) - Prayer is not a magic wand or a way to ask God to be at one’s service, Pope Francis said.

Prayer is a humble dialogue with God to grow spiritually and discover his will for the world, the pope said May 26 during his weekly general audience.

"In prayer, it is God who must convert us, not we who must convert God," he said.

The audience was held in the San Damaso Courtyard of the Apostolic Palace, where attendees were obliged to wear masks, but many ignored social distancing rules as they crowded along the barricades to greet and speak with Pope Francis.

The pope, who had taken off his mask, spoke at length with people, blessing them or objects they had brought, drinking mate, swapping zucchetos and signing books.

One of the many people the pope spoke with was Belarus-born Lidia Maksymowicz, 80, who spent three years at the Auschwitz-Birkenau concentration camp after she was sent there when she was 2 years old. The pope kissed the prisoner number tattooed on her left arm and the two embraced.

In his main audience talk, the pope continued his series on prayer by looking at how people can be certain God really listens to their prayers.

"Sometimes our prayers seem to go unheard, what we have asked for – for ourselves or for others – is not fulfilled," he said.

"Why does he not respond to our requests?" the pope asked.

The Catechism of the Catholic Church (2735) asks people to think more deeply about why they demand to see the results of their petitions: "What is the image of God that motivates our prayer: an instrument to be used? or the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ?" it says.

The pope said this passage warns people to avoid "the risk of not living an authentic experience of faith, but of transforming the relationship with God into something magical."

"Prayer is not a magic wand," he said. "It is a dialogue with the Lord. Indeed, when we pray, we can give in to the risk of not being the ones to serve God, but of expecting him to serve us."
Taking the leap of trust and faith

If the weather and a few other circumstances cooperate, I'll be joining a friend Sunday to jump out of a perfectly good airplane. I've already taken that leap before, but it'll be my friend's first time skydiving. We're jumping to celebrate an accomplishment.

As my friend and I discussed the logistics behind this adventure, I asked him if he was nervous.

"Not yet," he said. "I probably will be right before we get in the plane."

I immediately reminded him that we'll each have a well-experienced instructor attached to our backs, and I reminded him that there are a handful of safety instruments and protocols intended to ensure we land safely on the ground.

Apparently, I'm willing to put an awful lot of trust in another human—a stranger—and a bunch of instruments and metal clips.

We do that all the time, don't we? We put our trust in objects or other people pretty easily. I trust that my chair isn't going to break and drop me on the ground. I trust my vehicle isn't going to fall apart while I'm going down the highway at 65 miles per hour (probably faster, actually). I trust that my primary care provider has my best interest at heart and has the medical knowledge needed to help me be healthy and well. I trust that the flagger at the road work site is motivating me through only when it's actually safe.

Yet I have a difficult time putting my trust fully in the Lord. I can think of countless times when I've felt some urging or calling from the Lord, but I've rejected it thinking "I don't have time," or "I'm not capable of that."

Trusting the Lord means knowing He'll give you the time and the resources you need if its His will. Trusting the Lord means saying "yes" those calls and urgings and cooperating with Him.

It seemed appropriate that I was reflecting on this idea of trusting and taking leaps on the same weekend that I had the opportunity to attend the ordination Mass for Father Matthew Conger, Father John Ojuok and Father Fernando Solomon Jr.

These three men took a giant leap of faith in answering God's call, and they trust God will provide all that they need in their ministries and lives moving forward.

Please join me in praying for them as they live their vocations and praying that we all can turn our trust and wills over to the Lord.

The sacrament of the Holy Eucharist

Today I would like to take some time with you to consider and remember the importance of the sacrament of the Holy Eucharist for us as Catholics. I want to begin by telling you that I believe in faith all that our Catholic Church teaches about the Sacrament of the Holy Eucharist. I believe that the Holy Eucharist is truly the Body and Blood of our Savior, Jesus Christ.

On Sunday, June 6, we, as the Church of Christ, celebrate the Feast of "Corpus Christi" — now called "The Most Holy Body and Blood of Christ." This feast reminds us of how sacred and blessed is this Sacrament of the Holy Eucharist for us.

I believe that the Holy Eucharist was instituted by Jesus at the Last Supper. The Gospel writers describe for us the sacredness of that moment. Jesus wants to unite himself in a perfect way with his apostles. I believe that Jesus wants to continue to unite himself with us today through the reception of the Lord's Body and Blood in Holy Communion. I believe that Jesus is truly present in the sacrament of the Holy Eucharist.

In John 6, Jesus says, "I am the living bread that came down from heaven... unless you eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, you do not have life within you."

Each time the Church celebrates Mass and the Holy Eucharist, we are all united with the Lord Our God in a very special way. The Eucharist that we celebrate is a time of gratitude. We express our gratitude to God for his place in our lives.

God has blessed my life with my ordination as a priest. I have been called to bring the Holy Eucharist to the people of God. During this time of the Church year, this season of Pentecost, many receive ordination as priests. These new priests are truly called, as I was, to say the words of Jesus at the altar, to consecrate the bread and wine into the Body and Blood of Jesus and to bring the Holy Eucharist to people in many parishes.

This experience has been mine. Like these newly ordained priests, I remember well and continue to thank God for my vocation to celebrate Holy Mass and to bring Jesus to the people of a parish through the sacraments of the Church.

Recently, two of the priests of our Diocese of Ogdensburg, Father Richard Sturtz and Monsignor Harry Snow, died. Many of you know them, and they were your friends. They were exceptional priests. Father Sturtz was a faculty member at Wadham's Hall for a time and then became a dedicated pastor of several parishes. Father Snow was a wise director of the diocesan Office of Canonical Affairs and also a dedicated pastor to several parishes. I know their greatest joy as priests of the Lord Jesus was to bring the Lord Jesus to the people of their parishes through the celebration of the Blessed Eucharist at Mass.
‘Imitate Christ in His total self-giving and service’

Editor’s Note: The following is Bishop Terry R. LaValley’s homily from the ordination of Father Matthew Conger, Father John Ojuok and Father Fernando Solomon Jr. on May 29.

Deacon Matthew, Deacon John and Deacon Fernando – each one of you has shown remarkable perseverance in your unique journeys of faith. Your faith-filled response to the challenges each of you has encountered on the way has led to this sacred moment in your lives and led to this most blessed occasion in the faith life of this local Church. Let me begin by acknowledging and thanking your parents, those present and loved ones unable to be here, for their inspiring witness of faith and support of your priestly vocations. Thank you, moms and dads, for your sacrifice.

As your bishop, if there is one theme, one message that I ask you dear brothers to take with you as you begin priestly ministry, it is to imitate Christ in His total self-giving and service. It is not just what we do, but our earnest desire to give of ourselves completely, which reflects Christ’s endearing love for His flock. Such a life stance informs our way of thinking and acting, our way of relating to people. That is how we gain the great privilege of being called “Father.” To be called “Father” implies an intimate, self-emptying relationship with God’s people.

If we are to imitate Christ’s gift of self, priests must live and act in ways that enable us to be close to all the members of the flock. We will want to spend time with them, no matter their economic or social status, no matter their intellectual gifts or political leanings. We will eagerly share their joys and sorrows, not only in our thoughts and prayers but we will want to be in their company, so that through our presence and our ministry they can experience God’s love.

If I am not readily available to all, the hurting will find it so difficult to approach me and to open themselves up and trust me. (JPIC Address to Eucharistic Congress, Korea, 1989) As Pope Francis insists, we must smell of our sheep. "Keep watch over yourselves and over the whole flock." The service to which priests are called must reflect the way God loves and continues to care for His people. In a recent ordination in Rome, Pope Francis referred to this as a “style of closeness, of compassion and a style of tenderness.” We don’t sit in our rectories, waiting for someone to call us, we go out, in all humility, as Christ reached out to others.

Now, of course without prayer, the priest will empty himself out. He will quickly become a machine that makes a lot of clatter as he rusts out. In order to help others, the priest must first ask for help from the Lord. It is the priesthood of Jesus Christ, not ours. Everything that is essential to our ministry cannot be the product of our personal abilities.

What do the people of God demand of their priests? St. John tells us: They want one thing only: “We wish to see Jesus” (Jn.12:21). Our people want priests to lead them to Jesus, to put them in touch with Christ. The baptized want to see Jesus through their priests. They want to hear His Word. They want to see God. They want to learn how to pray. A priest who does not have Jesus in his heart can give nothing. No one can offer what he or she does not possess.

How can a priest lead community prayer if he does not remain constantly in intimate contact with the Lord by taking the time to live a disciplined prayer life? The Liturgy of the Hours, daily Mass, adoration of the Blessed Sacrament, all provide close encounters with God. If the priest does not pray, little by little, the faithful go away because the well in which they hoped to find water has run dry. A most important element in our evangelizing efforts is the priest’s persevering prayer.

Priests continue Jesus’ presence on earth. Our hands, consecrated by the sacred chalice, are no longer our own. They are Christ’s for the purpose of blessing, forgiving, and consoling. They must be open and pierced, like Jesus’, so as to hold nothing greedily. Again, priesthood is defined by selflessness and humility.

Lay people expect priests to tell them – clearly, firmly, and with paternal concern – not our opinions, but God’s teachings. A priest cannot, must not take advantage of his authority over the people of God to set forth his personal ideas, be it the way he celebrates the Mass, the lessons he teaches or the homily he preaches.

The mission of a priest is a challenging one: to make all Christians disciples who are willing to die for Christ and His Gospel. It is the priest’s responsibility and privilege to give spiritual nourishment that strengthens faith.

Nothing substantial can be accomplished with the lukewarm and the half-hearted. Do not be priests who are men of routine. Our souls are made for heroism and not for comfortable half-measures.

But don’t think that heroism is always spectacular. There is an everyday, silent holiness for which St. Joseph is the model. Brothers, your genuine prayerfulness will win people over to the Lord. (Cardinal Sarah)

The mystery that dwells within you can give you the strength to live in a society which is undermined by unbelief and religious indifference, even hostility. Your mission is not to save a fragile world. There is but one Savior. Your mission is to live out with fidelity and without compromise the faith you received from Christ. It is not a matter of influencing opinions. It is a matter of living the Gospel passionately. It’s that simple. It’s that difficult.

For a priest, the celebration of the Eucharist does not amount only to carrying out rites, of going through the correct liturgical motions. The celebration of the Mass presupposes that the priest enters with his whole being into the great gift of Christ to the Father, into the great “yes” of Jesus’ self-emptying to His Father. Brothers, don’t say Mass. Enter the event and pray Mass!

Lay faithful: pray for your priests. Pray for vocations to the priesthood. It is precisely in the presence of the Eucharist that we understand and appreciate best the gift of the priesthood, for the two are inseparable. Your participation in the life of the Church and your commitment to live the Gospel are a great source of encouragement and hope for your priests and your bishop.

You not only inspire us, but you also create a fertile field where vocations to the priesthood, indeed all Church vocations, can grow in response to God’s call.

Deacons Matt, John and Fernando, you have shown that you are not afraid to meet challenges that have been placed before you. Let the holiness of your lives be a delightful fragrance to Christ’s faithful, so that by word and example you may build up the house which is God’s Church. Carry out the ministry of Christ the Priest with constant joy. We have no room for listless spirits in the priesthood. Keep always before your eyes the example of the Good Shepherd who came not to be served but to serve, and who came to seek out and save what was lost. Through your faithfulness, your priestly life will experience a joy that no one will be able to deny you because you will know Jesus as your constant companion. Through your priestly ministry, May God be praised...forever may God be praised!

OGDENSBURG — For Msgr. Harry K. Snow, both his role as a diocesan judicial vicar and his role as pastor gave him opportunities to show Christ’s love to others.

“He was such a good pastor and a very effective canon lawyer and judicial vicar,” said Bishop Terry R. LaValley, a longtime friend of Msgr. Snow. “People trusted him, and they knew he cared for them. People approached him with difficulties or marriage issues, and he was there to hear them and offer insights and advice.

Msgr. Snow died May 23, 2021 at the age of 70.

Bishop LaValley said it was Msgr. Snow that first got him involved in the diocesan Tribunal and Office of Canonical Affairs.

“I was a parochial vicar at Sacred Heart Church in Massena,” Bishop LaValley said. “One day, (Msgr. Snow) asked if I would serve a day a week or two days a week in the Matrimonial Tribunal as associate secretary.”

Bishop LaValley said that request came in either 1989 or 1990, and he and Msgr. Snow “worked together since.”

“He was just a wonderful friend and a very devoted priest of the Church,” Bishop LaValley said. “He provided entertainment during breaktimes at the Chancery. He was a great storyteller, and he was not afraid to embellish.”

Msgr. Snow was also known as an ever-present pastor.

“He was a hard worker,” Bishop LaValley said. “He was always present to his people. If they needed him, he was there. Day off or not, he was there for his people.”

In addition to his roles with the Tribunal and with his parishes, Msgr. Snow was renowned for his dedication to the communities in which he served.

“He was very involved in the community,” Bishop LaValley said. “He was a fire chaplain, and he was very involved in the fire departments, particularly in Morristown. He got to know his community, Catholic or not Catholic, and he was very well respected.”

Bishop LaValley said Msgr. Snow was also well regarded amongst the priests of the diocese.

“He had a great rapport with his brother priests,” Bishop LaValley said. “You could always count on a chuckle when you were around Msgr. Snow.”

In an interview with the North Country Catholic upon the 40th anniversary of his ordination and his retirement from the Matrimonial Tribunal and Office of Canonical Affairs in 2017, Msgr. Snow cited a particular canon — #1752 — as guidance for his life as a priest. It says:

“The salvation of souls, which must always be the supreme law of the Church, is to be kept before one’s eyes.”

In 1985 he resumed his service as Tribunal Secretary and was appointed Pastor of St. John the Evangelist Church in Morristown and Our Lady of Grace in Briar Hill. In 1988, Father Snow was named the Judicial Vicar of the Diocese, a position he would hold under five bishops and nearly three decades. He was named Prelate of Honor by Pope John II in 1995.

In 1997, Msgr. Snow was named rector of St. Mary’s Cathedral, and in 2003 he returned home to serve at St. Andrew’s Church in Norwood. He was also appointed Dean of the St. Lawrence Deanery. Msgr. Snow became pastor of St. Mary’s Church in Waddington and St. John’s Church in Madrid in 2012 where he remained until his retirement in 2017.

Environmental Stewardship

How close can one get?

When we ponder the mystery of the Eucharist, it seems incredible that the Creator's desire to be near us would cause Him to take on the very flesh and blood of us humans! Yet that is exactly the mystery we celebrate this Sunday on the feast of Corpus Christi. This act not only made God close to us, but it also made Him intimately connected with the elements of the earth from which His body came and was sustained throughout His life. How close can our Creator get to us “earthlings”?

In Eucharist, when we are nourished spiritually by the Body of Christ, our bodies are also nurtured by the physical bread we eat. The act of eating connects us with the world. Thomas Merton says “From the moment you put a piece of bread in your mouth you are part of the world. Who grew the wheat? Who made the bread? Where was it grown? You are in relationship with all who brought it to the table. We are least separate and most in common when we eat and drink.”

Our celebration of Eucharist Pope Francis sees as “… also a light and motivation for our concerns for the environment, directing us to be stewards of all creation.” (236) So, our celebration of Mass and reception of the Holy Eucharist that unites us intimately with Christ doesn’t end there. What about the rest of our day? How will we bring this presence to illuminate our interactions with our neighbors and the environment?

One action that could have a positive impact both on our health and on the health of the earth is to check your cleaning products for ingredi­ents to see how these products affect the quality of the water, the purity of the air. The “greener products” may cost a little more now, but they will have long-range positive effects on the planet we leave behind for our children's well-being. We could view it as an investment in a healthier future for those we love.
USCCB president explains how planned discussion on Eucharist was set

After receiving an unprecedented letter from 67 bishops appealing for a delay in a discussion during the bishops’ upcoming spring general assembly on whether to prepare a teaching document on the reception of Communion, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops’ president explained in a memo the procedure followed in bringing the question to a vote during the June 16-18 virtual meeting.

The back-and-forth messages follow an increasingly public debate among the bishops about Catholic politicians who support keeping abortion legal and whether they should be denied access to the Eucharist.

In a May 22 memo to fellow bishops, Archbishop José H. Gomez of Los Angeles explained that the USCCB Administrative Committee approved a request from Bishop Kevin C. Rhoades of Fort Wayne-South Bend, Indiana, for the discussion on drafting a document to examine the “meaning of the Eucharist in the life of the church.”

The Administrative Committee includes conference officers and all of the committee chairmen. It set the spring assembly agenda during its meeting in March.

Bishop Rhoades chairs the bishops’ Committee on Doctrine, which would draft the document if approved by the full assembly.

Archbishop Gomez’s memo came in response to a May 13 letter, which was obtained by Catholic News Service, to him from 67 bishops who asked that any discussion on “eucharistic coherence” be removed from the assembly agenda.

The Pillar, a news and analysis website covering the Catholic Church, first reported on the bishops’ letter, which cites May 7 correspondence from Cardinal Luis Ladaria, prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith at the Vatican, to Archbishop Gomez.

The bishops wrote that “we respectfully urge that all conference-wide discussion and committee work on the topic of eucharistic worthiness and other issues raised by the Holy See be postponed until the full body of bishops is able to meet in person.”

Archbishop Gomez said USCCB rules require that the body of bishops first be asked whether to issue a document on a particular topic. Bishop Rhoades took such a step by asking the Administrative Committee to include time on the spring agenda to discuss such a question. The committee agreed.

The process, the memo explained, involves the creation of an “Action Item” for the bishops to consider.

Importantly, the Action Item does not ask the body to approve a final statement, but only whether drafting of a text may begin,” the memo said.

It added that if the action is approved, the doctrine committee would begin its work, subject to the conference’s “usual process of consultation, modification and amendment” when presented for consideration at a future general assembly.

“As you will note, the focus of this proposed teaching document is on how best to help people to understand the beauty and mystery of the Eucharist as the center of their Christian lives,” the archbishop wrote.

Archbishop Gomez’s memo included a draft, dated May 14, of an outline of a possible document with the proposed title "The Mystery of the Eucharist in the life of the Church: Why It Matters."

It outlines three parts, subtitled "The Eucharist, A Mystery to be Believed," "The Eucharist, A Mystery to be Celebrated" and "The Eucharist: A Mystery to be Lived."

Each part has three topics that would be addressed, including, respectively, the real presence of the body and blood of Christ in Communion, unity, beauty and identity as the "fount and apex of the whole Christian life," and moral transformation, eucharistic consistency and missionary discipleship.

The letter from the bishops was sent on letterhead of the Archdiocese of Washington. The archdiocese did not respond to a CNS email seeking comment.

NOW SHOWING

CRUELLA

NEW YORK (CIS) – Adults who want nothing more than to watch two gifted actresses camp it up will likely be satisfied with director Craig Gillespie’s glossy romp “Cruella” (Disney). Parents on the lookout for safe family fare, not so much.

In crafting a live-action origin story for the villain of Dodie Smith’s 1956 children’s novel, first seen on screen in the 1961 animated adaptation “101 Dalmatians,” screenwriters Dana Fox and Tony McNamara seem to want to let their ethically schizophrenic protagonist, played by Emma Stone, go over to the dark side yet keep her sympathetic. As a result, the film never finds its moral footing.

An aspiring fashion designer in 1970s London originally called Estella, Stone’s character is thrilled to be taken under the wing of the Baroness (Emma Thompson), the ruthless reigning queen of the rag trade. But plot developments involving an heirloom and a family tragedy lead her to assume the titular persona and work secretly to bring on her mentor’s downfall.

She’s aided in this project by her two long-standing best friends, Jasper (Joel Fry) and Horace (Paul Walter Hauser) and by a more recently acquired pal, transvestite clothing store owner Artie (John MciCrea). Before her big break, orphaned Estella used to make ends meet by helping Jasper and Horace pick pockets and rob homes. Though this aspect of her story can be shrugged off as belonging to the long cinema tradition of the lighthearted heist, her later drive for revenge is more problematic.

As she works to upstage – and thus undermine – the Baroness, Cruella drifts away from the devotion to the memory of her mother, Catherine (Emily Beecham), and the loyalty to her firefighting amigos that were once her trademark personality traits. Jasper and Horace justly accuse Cruella of giving in to egotism and ingratitude. Yet all the while, there’s a sense that the audience is meant to see her newfound wickedness – which, in reality, only amounts to being tiresome – as somehow fabulous.

The occasional humor – like the elegant interiors, costumes and cars more consistently on display – can only carry the picture so far. As cuddly as a spotless puppy this production is not. Unsuitable for impressionable viewers, it may be mildly diverting for grown-ups who can choose to ignore the unreliable moral compass by which it’s guided – or, rather, set adrift.

We adore, receive and become

In 1979, I was privileged to be part of a Corpus Christi procession in Rome. Pope John Paul II had restored the procession of the Blessed Sacrament through the streets. Houses were all decorated with flowers, and people were weeping for joy as the pope passed by. All were singing hymns as the pope carried that heavy monstrance from St. John Lateran to St. Mary Major. It was a public testimony that the Holy Eucharist is the source and summit of our faith.

Jesus, after all, becomes sacramentally present at every Mass in our own home-town church. Jesus remains in the elements after Mass as well. The ancient practice of Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament has been encouraged by all recent popes to support the practice of Holy Hours and Benediction.

Feasts are established by the Church to strengthen faith. This feast is no exception. The readings for today’s Mass describe the ritual actions of Moses pouring blood on the people. Why? To help them remember God’s commands. The second reading speaks of Jesus pouring out his blood on all people through His death on the Cross. This priestly act effectively redeemed the world from the Father’s displeasure. Then, the Gospel narrates how Jesus established the sacrament of Eucharist as the means of continuing His saving death, “Do this in remembrance of Me,” He told His apostles. We firmly believe this is the true Body and Blood of the Lord.

There is tremendous meaning in the word “communion,” which describes our reception of the Body and Blood of Jesus. Just as Jesus at the Last Supper passed around the one chalice, so too we share the one bread and the one cup at every Mass. First, we adore, then we receive, then we become the food we have received. We are truly one body in Christ. Strengthened and transformed in love, truth, and joy through the Spirit, we are ready to share the fruits of love, compassion, forgiveness, service, and all the rest of the great fruits of the Spirit with our brothers and sisters.

We are so privileged whenever we receive the Holy Eucharist, for we become what we have received. Incredible! That carries with it responsibilities. It is important for us to prepare by prayer before receiving Eucharist, and to make a suitable Thanksgiving after we have received the Eucharist. Our bodily gestures should reflect faith, reverence, and awareness of what has just transpired. Reflect back several times during the day on this gift God has given us. By this awareness, we may receive some inspiration of just how we will share the Lord this day.

Laudato Si in Nigeria

Here we can see how some of our Catholic brothers and sisters in Nigeria prepared for and spent the week of Laudato Si's anniversary.

"We will celebrate the Laudato Si anniversary to show how much things have changed for the good," says the Global Catholic Climate Movement (GCCM) Program Manager for Africa Father Benedict Ayodi, a member of the Order of Friars Minor Capuchin, on the occasion of Laudato Si Animators (LSA) online training course. Following Pope Francis' invitation to all Catholics and people of good will to take part in Laudato Si’ Week slated for May 16-25 to mark the sixth anniversary of the Encyclical letter, the global event will "celebrate" the improvements made so far towards nurturing the environment.

Among the initiatives dedicated to Pope Francis’ Encyclical on ecology, in Kenya the GCCM-Africa organized a webinar focused on its impact on the continent led by GCCM, Association of Members of Bishops' Conferences in East Africa and Symposium of Episcopal Conferences in Africa and Madagascar, as well as another webinar on “Living Laudato Si in our daily life as Christians” organized by GCCM-Africa and Daughters of St. Paul (FSP).

The week, under the theme “For we know that things can change,” has various organized webinars to enlighten the people on ecological conversion including among others critical opportunities in 2021 to create change, call for an integral path, dialogue on education, dialogue on energy and fossil fuels, sowing hope for the planet care prayer network and global action day for our common home.

The document sent to Agenzia Fides shows that the week will also be a time to reflect on what Covid-19 pandemic has taught us and to offer a roadmap for the future with hope.

"Even though we know that much still needs to be done, we rejoice and celebrate because in the last six years, the Church has made significant progress in the ecological conversion journey," said Father Ayodi addressing about 200 LSA.

During the week, the GCCM "will present to the whole Church living testimonies of Laudato Si transformations so far and offer tools that will help everyone in the next step of the journey." (Article from FIDES missionary news service of the Pontifical Mission Societies)

Sharing thoughts on struggles in small group

By Michael Neaton
North Country Cursillo

Welcome back to our world of Cursillo. I’d like to share a particularly enlightening experience I had with my Cursillo Small Group. One of the group members had shared that it was particularly upsetting that an area nursing home facility had been ravaged by COVID, and the resulting deaths were just devastating. Compounding the fact that these poor souls were not able to be comforted by visiting family in the end was the sadness and guilt that those family members might suffer with for being away from their loved ones. By the end of our group meeting that night, we had made a few resolutions. First was that there was something we could do about it. We could pray! We didn’t stop there, though. We resolved to have a special Small Group session the following week, to celebrate the lives of those lost and include their loved ones in this special prayer event. Each of us pledged to contribute in whatever way we saw fit, and we set up to reconvene exactly a week later.

I spent most of that next week waiting for the time where the Holy Spirit would bring me the words I wanted to say. The Spirit did not fail me, and I sat down one night and recorded the following reflection, which the members in my group suggested I share in the Cursillo Column in the North Country Catholic articles.

My Reflection:
As I approached this task of being part of a very reverent occasion, praying for the souls we lost on this earthly world due to the COVID-19 Pandemic, I struggled to find my own personal reflection. But on the eve of our service, I found myself overwhelmed by the presence of Jesus with a specific message for me.

Let me set the stage: it was another typically busy day in the life of Mike when I finally got home with my son Xavier in tow. Immediately the task was to whip up a dinner and eventually bring in the end of the day with our traditional nightly prayer litany. Fortunately, that regularly calms us down for the evening. However, I had just had another medical testing procedure done and was feeling a little sorry for myself in the midst of this medical concern of mine, which is making me evaluate my own struggle with the fragility of life. As typical after my son is in bed, tasks continued. I grabbed my daily mail and started going through the numerous solicitations for contributions I receive almost daily. It’s always an exasperating experience as there are so many causes, but I struggle to figure out which I should donate to (if any). I then opened one from the Franciscan Friars which solicited my special prayer intention. That caused me to pause and reflect. It wasn’t long before I was moved to make a donation in the name of a friend and neighbor struggling with Stage 4 cancer. The signs didn’t stop there because the next mailing I faced was the North Country Catholic paper which I knew had a “Sharing our Stories” series featuring yours truly. I had already read it a couple times, but new things seemed to come out of it with each read through. I didn’t get to it this time, as I started by reading the Editors Note by Darcy Fargo, a Cursillo friend of mine.

Say what you will about her weekly writings, but I look forward to her whimsical style and she did not disappoint. Her article hit upon a central theme of life that I had been contemplating for some time. If you didn’t read it, she used as an example the story of a man who wanted to observe the emergence of an Emperor Moth from its cocoon. However, as he was faced with the struggle, he attempted to help by cutting of the cocoon away and ended up interfering with the process in which the struggle itself brought about the release of essential fluids to the wings of the moth. The interference evidently caused the death of the moth.

So, if you think my story has no point, let me bring you back to the word “struggle.” It came up, sometimes intentionally, throughout this reflection already. It was what I had hoped to be the focal of the article written about me, and then it appeared in Darcy’s column. The message sent me was clear. THE STRUGGLE! It’s what we are born out of and it will be what we will all die of, for we are truly born to die.

We are here today to reflect and pray for the many who have struggled so drastically with the end of life due to this Pandemic called COVID; a virus that has dominated our lives for almost a year now. Of course, there are those that have passed. They lost their fight. More than noteworthy, though, is the struggle before their loss. Frightening to all of us is the prospect of knowing a loved one is dying, and we can’t be with them through the process. These are the struggles we are commemorating in this simple but important service tonight. Our prayers are desperately needed, and we have gathered for just that. Things cannot be undone, but we can pray here for those lost and those grieving those losses. We of course also say prayers of gratitude that we currently are not experiencing either of those perspectives of struggle and loss. We have all experienced the loss of the regular or ordinary aspects of life this past year. But we are blessed by knowing that Christ is with us through it all. He is also with every Covid victim and every friend and family member of Covid victims, so we rest assured that the peace of God’s love will come.

Finally, as I sat at the “Our Lady of Lourdes” table at my Pilgrim Weekend of Cursillo in July of 2018, and as her commemoration is upon us, let us pray now to entrust the sick and dying to Mary, Mother of Mercy, and our Lady of Lourdes, by praying together the Hail Mary. Hail Mary full of grace....
