Bishops hold meeting
Bishop Terry R. LaValley outlines some of the discussion that took place at the recent United States Conference of Catholic Bishops meeting, held virtually due to the COVID-19 pandemic.
While a number of topics were discussed, the Eucharist was a primary focus of the gathering.

Pope: Suffering pushes Christians to seek unity
VATICAN CITY (CNS) – After receiving the gift of a chalice from leaders of the Lutheran World Federation, Pope Francis said divided Christians should suffer because they cannot share the Eucharist, but that suffering should spur them to work and pray harder for Christian unity.

As the formal Catholic-Lutheran dialogue proceeds, “it will be important to examine with spiritual and theological humility the circumstances that led to the divisions, trusting that, although it is impossible to undo the sad events of the past, it is possible to reinterpret them as part of a reconciled history,” Pope Francis said June 25 as he welcomed the IWF delegation.

Archbishop Panti Filibus Musa, president of the IWF, told Pope Francis that 2021 “is marked by one of those difficult memories: the 500 years of the excommunication of Martin Luther. We cannot change history, but we can retell it in a way that it carries the promise of a better future, thus becoming our story of reconciliation.”

And, presenting Pope Francis with the chalice and a paten, he explained that the gifts were made by members of the ecumenical Community of Taizé in France and that the glaze used was made from the sand taken from the refugee camp in Zaatar, Jordan, the world’s largest camp for Syrian refugees.

“Sharing the Lord’s Supper together is also bearing the burdens of all those who have lost everything,” the archbishop told the pope. The solidarity shared at the altar “shapes who we are and ought to become: a people who, seeing the transfigured face of Christ, walk into the valley to see Christ in the disfigured faces of the exploited, the hungry and the poor. In this journey, we become fully church, together. Let us act together now, deepening into visible solidarity our union in prayer.”

Congratulations, commissioned lay ministers!
After completing the two-year Formation for Ministry program, new lay ministers were commissioned by Bishop Terry R. LaValley at St. Mary’s Cathedral on Sunday. Congratulations for the lay ministers can be found in this edition. Coverage will be in the July 14 NCC.

The inspiration of an ugly sweater

It’s quite possibly the ugliest sweater I’ve ever seen. When my mother asked my niece, Emma, now age 14, what she wanted for her birthday, Emma sent her a photo of a celebrity wearing a sweater with blocks of varying colors all over it. Emma asked my mother, a talented crocheter, to make her a similar sweater.

When I received a photo of the sweater, then placed on a flat surface for display purposes, I laughed out loud. This sweater is ugly. That’s not a commentary on my mother’s workmanship; mom did a great job. It’s an ugly pattern. Later, my sister sent me a photo of my niece wearing that sweater as they traveled around a nearby city celebrating Emma’s birthday. While I still don’t understand how she tolerated wearing a sweater on an 80-degree day, I can say with all honesty that Emma looked great in that sweater.

Emma marches to the beat of her own drum. She knows what she likes, and she really doesn’t care what others think of her clothing choices (ugly sweaters), hair styles (currently shaved) or preferred activities (quirky craft projects and watching hockey). She seems to have a pretty good idea of who she is, and she’s comfortable taking that young lady into the world.

Frankly, I wish I could be as brave as my 14-year-old niece.

I know who I am. I’m a child and follower of God. Unlike Emma, I’m not always brave enough to take that out with me into this world and be who I am without apprehension or fear.

In this secular society, it’s hard to proclaim our faith to family, friends, colleagues... When I feel called to do so, I know there’s a risk that others will think I’m weird or worse. That risk – that fear – causes me to hesitate, at best, and sometimes prevents me from sharing the Gospel at all.

This week, I was participating in a conversation with another individual, a trusted professional, when the conversation went in a direction that made me think about our faith, specifically to the forgiveness our Lord shows us and we’re called to show others. While I considered sanitizing my presentation of my ideas to remove the faith reference out of fear, I then thought of Emma. If a 14-year-old young lady has the fortitude to be completely herself, I should, too.

I talked about the faith reference with that trusted professional. All because of an ugly sweater.

Confession from a priest’s perspective

Once more on confession: I would like to take a few moments with you to share the unique position of a priest as a confessor. I noticed that at one of my daily Masses recently, a Gospel reading told the story of Jesus teaching his disciples – then and now – the Lord’s Prayer. You will remember how much I love this prayer. I know that I have often been with a family around a hospital bed of a loved one and I wanted them all to join with me in prayer. I always turned to the Lord’s Prayer. It is a perfect prayer.

So, there are many lessons each time we say the Lord’s Prayer. Today I am thinking of forgiveness. “Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us.” Jesus calls us to be a forgiving people. Jesus promises us that God is a forgiving God. Our Catholic Church is a forgiving Church. So, a few minutes today on forgiveness. I truly realize how necessary forgiveness is as I act in my priestly ministry as a confessor, acting as a disciple of Jesus. Each week, I spend an hour or more in the celebration of the sacrament of reconciliation – hearing confessions of the faithful. This sacrament is an important, even necessary part of the life of a Catholic.

For the priest as a confessor, this sacrament is an amazing opportunity. I, as an ordained priest, bring God’s forgiveness to all who come to me to confess with repentence. I can bring them the grace of God’s love and forgiveness. I want them to realize that despite any failings they are loved. Our God always loves them unconditionally. God is calling them to a new life – through conversion – to come alive with love and courage and to truly find love for others and change what must be changed with faith.

The priest as a confessor is not a judge. Our task as a confessor is to guarantee forgiveness and to encourage a newness of life. As a priest, I promise the love and support of the Savior Jesus. Jesus made it very clear by his life, his sufferings, his crucifixion, his resurrection that all was a demonstration of the forgiveness of God for all of us sinners. During Mass, at the time of Communion, we all pray, “Lamb of God, who takes away the sins of the world, have mercy on us.”

I often say to those who find confession difficult that the joy and happiness and peace that comes when we discover the forgiveness of the Lord. The real difficulty in this sacrament is that each of us as sinners must promise our readiness to change. When our confession indicates that there is something, some failing that is interfering with our friendship with our God, then it is time for conversion. My task as a priest is to encourage and lead a sinner to a new life with the Lord’s constant help. Through this conversion each person will find peace and happiness – a forgiveness that bring joy.

One more thing to mention to you that is an important responsibility of each priest: the seal of the confession. The catechism explains this: “The Church declares that every priest who hears confessions is bound under very severe penalties to keep absolute secrecy regarding the sins that his penitents have confessed to him. He can make no use of knowledge that confession gives him about penitents’ lives. This secret, which admits of no exceptions is called the ‘sacramental seal’ because what the penitent has made known to the priest remains ‘sealed’ by the sacrament. You have probably heard stories of just how serious all priests are about this seal of secrecy.”
Twice a year, the full body of the Bishops of the United States gather, normally in June and November, in what are referred to as plenary sessions. Due to the pandemic, our recent gatherings have found us meeting virtually. On June 16-18, we held our most recent plenary session virtually. For the bishops of New York State, it has been even longer since we last met. We were in Rome for the ad limina visit with the Holy Father in November 2019, the last time the U.S. bishops convened in Baltimore.

At our recent meeting, one of the first agenda items that required action by the bishops included votes that advanced the causes of canonization of Joseph Lafleur, Diocesan Priest and of Marinus Leonard LaRue, professed Brother of the Order of St. Benedict. There was overwhelming support for both causes.

The bishops also approved the development of a new formal statement of and comprehensive vision for Native American / Alaska Native ministry. I found this to be especially timely in light of the recent discovery of the buried remains of over 215 lost indigenous children in cemeteries in the former Kamloops Indian Residential School in British Columbia about which I wrote in my column in the June 16 issue of the North Country Catholic.

I was privileged to be invited to a special Farewell Gathering held at Akwesasne on June 19 where the parishioners of St. Regis Mission honored Sister Mary Christine Taylor, SSJ for her remarkable ministry to the Native Americans at Akwesasne for over forty years. Many inspiring stories were told of Sister’s devoted service and loving presence to the native Americans. Congratulations and thank you Sister Christine and Sisters of St. Joseph!

Our virtual meeting also saw the bishops approve some edits in liturgical books, including the Liturgy of the Hours and the Order of Penance. Also approved was a proposed draft of “Pastoral Framework for Marriage and Family Life Ministry in the United States.”

In addition to such “Action Items,” reports were offered by the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate (CARA) regarding the pastoral care of migrants, refugees, and travelers; The Catechesis of the Catholic Church; “A National Framework on Youth and Young Adults;” and a report and discussion on urgent immigration matters.

The chairwoman of the National Review Board, Ms. Suzanne Healy, commended the American bishops for the progress that has occurred since 2002 when the sex abuse scandal rocked the church. She cited several examples of significant improvements that have been instituted since the promulgation of the Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People. She challenged the bishops to continue with outreach efforts to address the ongoing needs of survivors.

A few weeks ago, I held regional meetings with the priests of our diocese and then with our permanent deacons. This was a good opportunity for us to share our pastoral and personal experiences during the pandemic and speak of our concerns as we move forward, hopefully soon, out of the emergency mode into a state of somewhat normalcy.

A concern that surfaced at all our local gatherings was participation at Eucharist. Would the faithful return to Mass? How can we increase Mass attendance beyond what it was before the coronavirus reared its ugly head? Livestreaming was a wonderful tool for those who did not come to Church, but it does not substitute for actual presence. From these discussions, there was a consensus that now is the time for us to focus our efforts on the Eucharist. This is a “teachable” moment. With that in mind, several weeks ago, the clergy of our diocese took part in an online program on the Eucharist presented by the editor of Adoremus and director of the Office for Sacred Worship in the Diocese of LaCrosse, Wisconsin, Christopher Carstens.

Monsignor Robert Aucoin is coordinating our diocesan efforts to address the centrality of the Eucharist in the Diocese of Ogdensburg. Simultaneous to this, the USCCB is proposing a Eucharistic Revival 2022-2024 that will include: Diocesan Revival, Parish Revival and National Revival. This national project is in its formative stage. We plan to integrate our local efforts with the national project.

Given the times in which we live, I believe it essential to focus on the Eucharist, the “source and summit” of who we are and what we believe as Catholic Christians. I strongly support the decision that approved the request of the Committee on Doctrine to proceed with the drafting of a formal statement on the meaning of the Eucharist in the life of the Church. In its development, I hope the document will focus on: The Eucharist: A Mystery to be believed, to be celebrated, and to be lived. The proposed document would include teaching on the Real Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in Holy Communion as well as moral transformation.

As a pastor of souls, I have the responsibility of teaching what Christ has handed on to His Apostles and, through them, the Church. No Catholic Christian, politician, clergy or lay person, is exempt from developing a well-informed conscience and living what Christ has taught. This is to be a teaching document on the Eucharist, not a public indictment against certain individuals. The bishops have a responsibility to proclaim the Truth with conviction and clarity, regardless of what the opinion polls indicate. The truth should strengthen, not weaken our unity.
‘Father Jay’ reflects on culture, faith

By Mary Beth Bracy
Contributing Writer

MORRISONVILLE – We are “Gifted to give – faith is a gift from God.” Father Pedro Edgardo N. De La Rosa, known as “Father Jay,” parochial vicar at St. Alexander’s, Morrisonville, St. James, Cadyville, and St. Augustine’s in Peru, brought this message with him from across the world.

During the “Faith around the world: the Philippines” Eastern Region Commissioned Lay Ministers Association (ERCLMA) Spring Event, Father De La Rosa talked about faith, his vocation and culture. Held on June 16 in St. Alexander’s, the evening began with Mass, followed by the reflection, time for questions and refreshments.

On March 14, 2021, Pope Francis celebrated 500 years of Christianity in the Philippines. Father De La Rosa explained that in 1521, Ferdinand Magellan brought Catholicism to the Philippines and 800 people were baptized. On Easter 2021, the Philippine Church began to commemorate this fifth centenary. Archbishop Romulo Valles, president of the Catholic Bishops’ Conference of the Philippines, declared the theme: “Gifted to give” and that “Faith is a gift from God. And so, we are joyful in this special jubilee year.”

Father De La Rosa proclaimed “the joyful witness to evangelical charity” that Catholics in his homeland reflect “in hard times.” “It is joyful to believe and entrust our lives in Jesus,” our faith is “strong amidst the storms of life, assured of Our Lord’s Presence.” It is our “duty to evangelize,” Father De La Rosa relayed. The “seed of faith in their hearts,” planted by their forefathers, helps the faithful and those they serve, including the needy and marginalized.

Most. Rev. Leonardo Legaspi, Archbishop Emeritus of Father De La Rosa’s diocese of Caceres, began the Caceres Mission Aid Program on May 26, 1997. Since then, priests from Caceres have been sent to 37 dioceses, including several in the United States, and in numerous countries.

Describing his life and call, Father Pedro Edgardo “Jay” De La Rosa, mentioned that he’s not sure where his nickname came from. His paternal grandfather, Pedr0, and father, Edgardo, are both good joke, “here I am.” His mother, Ida, along with his father, are retired government employees who now live in the United States. In 3rd grade, he became an altar server and assisted at Mass every Sunday. It was then that he first considered a vocation, since he enjoyed being with priests and seminarians.

However, in high school, Father De La Rosa planned on becoming a physical therapist. Then, there was a vocation campaign, and students who attended could miss a class. He went to get out of math and ended up entering seminary, he said.

As a priest, he’s served in several areas. First, he was a professor and formator at Holy Rosary preparatory seminary for five years. Father De La Rosa is grateful that 18 of his former students are now priests.

In 2011, Father De La Rosa became the “pioneer priest” of St. Francis Parish, which began as rice fields. Father De La Rosa oversaw the construction of the church, rectory and parish hall. Through “sweat and blood,” Father De La Rosa and his parishioners “sacrificed a lot for fundraising activities.” One of the most popular was singing Christmas Carols. They attribute the success to nine days of votive Masses in honor of the Blessed Mother. The “Mass of the Rooster” began at 4 a.m. each morning and was held from December 16 to 24. Father De La Rosa’s day began at 2 a.m., when he prepared the church; following Mass he spent his day tending to the needs of the parish, offered 6 p.m. Mass and helped with cooking, often until midnight.

Though it required a lot of sacrifice, it was “very fulfilling,” because it was “not for ourselves but for God.” Due to this, it really “pains” him that dioceses in the United States have parishes that are closed due to lack of priests and faithful. In many places, he commented, former churches have been turned into restaurants and stores.

After eight years, Father De La Rosa was transferred to Divine Mercy Parish. He became the Divine Mercy Association director for the Archdiocese of Caceres and his parish became the shrine. They needed to construct a large parish hall. Thankfully, it only took five months, and in May 2019 it became the House of Mercy.

Then, Father De La Rosa was asked to come to the Diocese of Ogdensburg. It was difficult, at first, since he was “happy and fulfilled” in the Philippines. It meant “leaving the comfort of the place (where) he grew up,” loved ones, and his dog. It has been an adjustment to work as a parochial vicar, adapt to our weather and food. Most of all, it is different not celebrating Mass in his native language. Still, Father De La Rosa said that he is “happy and fulfilled” here, and grateful to Father Scott R. Seymour, Father William L. Gordon, Bishop Terry R. LaValley and other diocesan staff.

Father De La Rosa emphasized that family is the center of the Filipino social structure – including extended family and Godparents, who are much closer and sometimes live with their adult children, etc. There are not nursing homes in the Philippines, and there is no divorce by law. They affectionately call elders Tita (literally meaning aunt) and Tito (uncle). They “kiss” the hand of priests and elders (placing their forehead on their hand). The reason they “kiss” priests hands is because holy oil is poured on them at ordination.

Father De La Rosa added that, when Filipinos do not “live up to norms of conduct, (they) bring shame on (their) families.” Though poor, they are lavish in generosity to show hospitality (e.g. at parties). They also offer their best to guests and invite people for meals, regardless of the individual. Filipinos visit their neighbors often.

“Everybody knows everyone in a town,” he said.

In the end, shared Father De La Rosa, “no culture (is) better than (an)other, it’s how we’re reared and molded.” We need to “respect differences.”
Community honors Sister M. Christine Taylor

AKWESASNE – Parishioners and friends from St. Regis Church and Akwesasne honored, celebrated, and thanked Sister Mary Christine Taylor, a Sister of St. Joseph, at the Rouke home on Saturday, June 19.

Sister Mary Christine was honored as a devoted servant of our Lord who responded to the call of the Holy Spirit, to serve the people of Akwesasne. The people responded greatly through the past 47 years of her dedicated and loving service to the community of St. Regis Parish and to the community of Akwesasne.

Father Jerome Pastores, pastor of St. Regis Church, began with a prayer welcoming everyone and giving thanks for the dedication and service Sister Mary Christine gave to the parish and to the community. A delicious meal, prepared by the people, was served.

Following the meal, Bishop Terry R. LaValley spoke of Sister Mary Christine’s dedicated spirit because of her prayer and passion for serving the people by bringing the love of God to them.

Grand Chief Abram Benedict of the Mohawk Council of Akwesasne and Chief Michael Conners of the St. Regis Mohawk Tribe presented Sister Mary Christine with a plaque recognizing her achievements for the people.

Minerva White shared the background and history of Mater Dei College responding to the call to open an extension of Mater Dei for the people. Sister Mary Christine was responsible for the beginning of the Mater Dei Extension and its many years of educating the people of Akwesasne.

Sister encouraged the people to become educated, and the strength of her faith in God spurred them forward. Her prayer and efforts bore fruit as they would carry forward their hopes and dreams to build a better world.

Matt Rouke, Sister Mary Christine’s first secretary at Mater Dei College, also praised sister for her faith and guidance. Matt invited the choir from St. Regis to sing the Saint Kateri. Sister Mary Christine spoke to her people expressing her gratitude to them. Above all, she thanked God for her gift of being with the people of Akwesasne and the parish at St. Regis.

Sister Mary Christine promised continued prayer for them, especially those she wished to visit again, the people in the Nursing Homes.

Her final words were: “All for the honor and glory of God and for the ‘dear neighbor.’” She closed with the prayer to Saint Kateri,

“O Saint Kateri, Lily of the Mohawks, Your love for Jesus, so strong, so steadfast, pray that we may become like you. Your short and painful life showed us your strength and humility. Pray that we may become forever humble like you. Like the bright and shining stars at night, we pray that your light may forever shine down upon us, giving light, hope, peacefulness, and serenity in our darkest moments. Fill our hearts, Saint Kateri Tekakwitha with your same love for Jesus and pray that we have the strength and courage to become one like you in Heaven. Amen.”

The Mater Dei Extension educated hundreds of students from the Reservation.

The people have expressed their gratitude for their education in their service given back to their community and beyond. Former Chief Alma Ransom, who praised Sister Mary Christine’s tenacity, expressed this deep appreciation.

“There are different kinds of spiritual gifts but the same spirit; there are different forms of service but the same Lord; there are different workings but the same God who produces all of them in everyone.”

Environmental Stewardship

Future is in our hands

This quote on a poster with a photo of a tiny tree in a person’s hands reminds us that the future IS in OUR hands. … young, old and everyone in between. The beauties of this season of summer abound around us and beckon us outside to bask in them with all our senses. It also calls us to become increasingly aware of the ways that we can be good environmental stewards of this precious yet fragile gift and to act NOW for generations to come.

This week we continue share some thoughts and experiences of our young people on caring for God’s Creation. This week we hear first from Corinne Woods from the Middle School at St. Mary’s School in Ticonderoga. Her project, entered in the Pope Francis Green Apple diocesan project, is titled, “How Gardening can help save the Earth.”

“Gardening is a way of life. … getting your hands dirty. … seeing life in the dirt like worms or other insects. … providing for others (your neighbor, charity)

Gardening can save the world. People everyday use this source for food. It helps keep our environment healthy – fewer pollutants, less processed food, no factories involved. It is a natural resource for food. Animals can eat natural food. This has not been processed. No factories involved. It is a healthy way of eating. … less trash and waste is used. … no plastic bags, bottles or cans used in this process.” Corinne’s poster is decorated with tiny plants and surrounded with delicious looking fresh fruits and veggies!

The third graders from St. Agnes School in Lake Placid made art pieces made of a world with legs and feet attached to a pledge that each individual student wrote on “HOW I CAN MAKE THE WORLD MORE BEAUTIFUL.” Some pledges included: pick up trash, use less plastics, plants flowers, etc. to mention a few.

These are all tips that we may want to do or add our own list and put them into practice now!

See more of the Green Apple projects on Pages 8 and 9 of this edition.

July 13 – Rev. George Garand, 1941

Fr. Sony and the parishioners from St. James Major, Lake Pleasant and St. Ann’s, Wells would like to wish

Jean Doell & Frank Sczerzenie

Prayerful congratulations on your recent commissioning as Lay Ministers.
More than 60 parishioners of St. Mary’s in Fort Covington participated in a Corpus Christi procession on the June 6 solemnity. Several others stayed in the church during the procession to pray the rosary. Participants made their way around the block near the parish, stopping at three altars. At each altar, a Gospel reading related to the Eucharist was proclaimed and a hymn was sung. The procession returned to St. Mary’s for Benediction.

Congratulations and God’s Blessings on Mikayla Ferguson

On your commissioning as Lay Minister.
We are very blessed to have your ministry among us!

From Father Don Manfred and the parishioners of St. Stephen’s Parish, Croghan

The Roman Catholic Community of Cape Vincent, Rosiere and Chaumont offer sincere congratulations to Paul DuFlo

On your recent commissioning as Lay Minister.
We look forward to your years of service with our parish.
Green Apple Awards

Pope Francis Caring for our Common Home Green Apple Awards are awarded to families, schools, organizations or faith formation classes for collaborative endeavors that “encourage action steps to ‘care for God’s creation’” and sharing these endeavors with their schools, parishes and communities.

Students in Natalie Wylie’s kindergarten class at Seton Catholic in Plattsburgh did a ‘Green Team Challenge’ for Earth Day. Students completing the challenge became official Green Team members and received a badge and prize. Students learned that every day is Earth Day, not just one day a year, and they completed a ‘trash walk’ collecting garbage around the school. Pictured with Wylie and Sister Bethany Fitzgerald, SSJ, are kindergarten students Elijah Maggy, Ryan Meschinelli, Siobhan Lawliss, Oliver Henry, Emily Baker, Arianna LeClair, Avery White, Milan McLean, Anthony Christodoulou, Edward Bleeker, Caleb Chase and Eva Blais.

Students at St. Agnes School in Lake Placid took place in a Clean up Day to pick up trash on the streets around the school. The students who are pictured are Emily, Eleanor, Jace, Henri, McKenzie, Celia, Knox, Louise, Harry, Adrianna and Sean.

Sister Kathleen DeBoalt’s second grade students at Immaculate Heart Central planted daffodil bulbs in the fall in front of the school’s statue of the Blessed Mother. Pictured are Giovanni Moran, Christian Alteri, Sully Perin, Mason Granger, Gabe Nicol, Ezekiel Ryave, Jason Shah, Victo­ria Dean, Ruth Larcente, Alexandria Vrooman, and Madison Ficht. Not pictured but helped with the planting were Gabriel Windmueller, London Taylor and Finley Aiken as well as the other second graders.
On April 24, a dozen IHC students donated their Saturday morning to cleaning up a 2 ½ mile stretch of roadway and wetlands near the school. This service event, in support of Habitat for Humanity’s ‘Earth Day Roadside Clean-Up,’ provided the students an opportunity to celebrate the earth while demonstrating Immaculate Heart Central’s commitment to being a “good neighbor.” A week later another group of IHC’s service-minded students (pictured above) were back at it helping plant 50 bare-root trees alongside volunteers from Tree Watertown and Rotary International. In June each Earth Day participant was recognized as a recipient of the Diocese of Ogdensburg’s 2021 Green Apple Award.

Congratulations to Jeffrey Morelock and Renee Morelock on your commissioning as lay ministers for our parish.

May God bless you abundantly for all the good you have done and continue to do.

Holy Cross Parish
Plattsburgh, NY
A 23-year-old woman named Keira Bell recently brought a pivotal lawsuit against the National Health Services Gender Identity Development Clinic in London, better known as the Tavistock Clinic. Keira experienced significant personal harm from puberty blockers, testosterone and an operation to remove her breasts. She claims the medical staff at the clinic failed to challenge her seriously about her decision as a teenager to transition to a male. In a landmark ruling delivered in December 2020, a British court upheld her claim that she’d been rushed through gender reassignment without proper safeguards.

Keira represents the leading edge of a new class of young people struggling with gender dysphoria who, as they become adults, are starting to push back against various “gender affirmation” interventions perpetrated against them, even, in some cases, seeking legal recourse and financial redress. As these intrepid individuals challenge the status quo, they are becoming known as “trans-desisters” or “detransitioners.”

When Keira was 16 and struggling with gender dysphoria, she was referred to the Tavistock Clinic and was almost immediately launched down the medical path. After three one-hour long visits to the medical facility, she was prescribed puberty blockers, powerful drugs that delay the development of signs of puberty. In an interview with the British Broadcasting Corporation, she stated that there hadn’t been adequate investigation or therapy prior to that stage.

“I should have been challenged on the proposals or the claims that I was making for myself,” she said. “I think that would have made a big difference.”

Later she was prescribed the male hormone testosterone, to help her develop male features like a beard, moustache and a deep voice. A few years later she underwent a mastectomy.

“Initially I felt very relieved and happy about things, but I think as the years go on, you start to feel less and less enthusiastic or even happy about things.”

“You can continue to dig yourself deeper into this hole or you can choose to come out of it and have the weight lifted off your shoulders.”

She stopped taking the cross-sex hormones at age 22 and says she has come to accept being female now. She remains upset, however, about what had happened to her over the last decade.

“I was allowed to run with this idea that I had, almost like a fantasy, as a teenager... and it has affected me in the long run as an adult.”

Vulnerable young people, caught up in the pressure of the moment, have too easily been drawn into life-altering pathways involving medications and scalps with their frequently irreversible effects. Puberty blockers, cross-sex hormones and complex surgeries can all lead to permanent damage, even the destruction of a young person’s reproductive organs and fertility.

Now in her early 20s, Keira soberly observes, “I’m very young. I’ve only just stepped into adulthood and I have to deal with this kind of burden or radical difference.”

Parents have a serious obligation to protect their children from the gender-reassignment industry, which profits handsomely from the lucrative, long term hormone prescriptions and the multiple complex surgeries. When parents give consent for cross-sex interventions on their children, they will often do so under pressure from clinicians and professional societies like the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP).

Keira and other detransitioners insist that extended waiting periods, with appropriate questioning and challenging of young people, need to occur as part of a good psychotherapeutic response to claims of gender dysphoria. The AAP, meanwhile, strongly discourages such approaches, telling pediatric primary care providers, in an official statement, “to be a reliable source of validation, support, and reassurance,” and exclusively to pursue “affirmation-based approaches” for children’s mental health services, including pharmacological and surgical interventions.

As James Cantor, Director of the Toronto Sexuality Centre, noted in a critical review of the AAP statement, “Although most all clinics and professional associations in the world use what’s called the watchful waiting approach to helping gender-diverse children, the AAP statement instead rejected that consensus, endorsing gender affirmation as the only acceptable approach.”

The available studies reveal, moreover, that the majority of pre-adolescent children who present as “trans” eventually revert to the identity that accords with their biological sex. Those studies indicate at least 67 percent of gender diverse children cease wanting to transition by puberty as long as “gender affirmation” approaches are not pursued or advocated.

Keira sums up her experience this way: “I look back with a lot of sadness. There was nothing wrong with my body. I was just lost and without proper support. Transition gave me the facility to hide from myself even more than before. It was a temporary fix.”

These first-hand testimonies from brave and outspoken detransitioners like Keira Bell should prompt us to listen closely to their stories and beware of “affirmation-based approaches” that often cloak the betrayal of our gender-confused youth.

Hundreds of bodies found at former residential school

TORONTO (CNS) – The Cowessess First Nation will put a name to each of the hundreds of bodies found at the unmarked graves on the former Marieval Indian Residential School, vows Chief Cadmus Delorme.

“We will put a headstone and a grave to each of them,” Delorme said at a June 24 news conference to announce the discovery of hundreds of bodies on the southeast Saskatchewan First Nations’ lands.

The chief announced the discovery of up to 751 unmarked graves at the site of the Catholic residential school on its territory, the news coming almost a month after the discovery of 215 children’s bodies buried at another residential school in Kamloops, British Columbia.

The graves at Marieval—which Delorme said were not part of a mass grave—were discovered by ground-penetrating radar which the First Nation, with the help of Saskatchewan Polytechnic, had been using since earlier this month on the grounds of the cemetery. He also said it’s not yet certain if all the bodies are children from the school. Delorme also stressed there could be a 10% margin of error, so he was working on the assumption there are “over 600” bodies buried at the site.

“We always knew there were graves here” through oral history passed along from elders in the community, he said.

The Marieval school, located about 85 miles east of Regina, Saskatchewan, opened in 1898. It was run by Catholic missionar­ies and funded by the federal government until 1968, when the government took over full control before handing over responsibility for the school to the Cowessess First Nation in 1987. The school closed in 1997 and was demolished in 1999.

In a statement addressed to Delorme and members of the Cowessess nation hours after the news conference, Archbishop Donald Bolen of Regina, said, “Words fail in the face of the news.”

“I can only imagine the pain and waves of emotion that you and your people are experiencing right now,” said Archbishop Bolen, who has met with the Cowessess people in the past.

“The gravesite work brings us face to face with the brutal legacy of the Indian Residential School system, a product of a colonialist history which has left so much suffering and intergenerational trauma,” the archbishop said. “The operation of the Marieval Residential School at Cowessess left many people deeply wounded by various kinds of abuse.

“As you have communicat­ed elsewhere, Chief Cadmus, even for those of us who were not there or not involved, it is nonetheless the painful legacy that we need to carry. The incredible burden of the past is still with us, and the truth of that past needs to come out, however painful, as only truth can lead to reconciliation. As you said of the gravesite, ‘the truth is there.’ Thank you for your commitment as chief and that of your whole community as you seek out the truth and search for a rest that brings an end to racism and opens a path to justice and to healing.”

Archbishop Bolen said he had apologized in the past, “but I extend that apology again and pledge to do what we can to turn that apology into meaningful concrete acts—including assisting in accessing information that will help to provide names and information about those buried in unmarked graves—and to stand by you in whatever way you request.”

At the news conference, Delorme said the graves had been marked in the past, but in 1960 the headstones were taken down by Catholic Church representatives.

“We didn’t remove the headstones, that’s a crime in this country,” he said.

By putting a name to each and every person buried there, “we want to make sure we keep that place so we can heal,” said Delorme.

“A lot of the pain we see in our people comes from there,” said elder Florence Sparvier, a knowledge keeper in the Cowessess community.

Sparvier attended the Marieval school and recalled how the children were not treated very well by the Oblate missionaries and the nuns who ran and taught at the school.

“They made us believe we didn’t have souls,” said Sparvier, 80.

In 2019, the Archdiocese of Regina agreed to pay $70,000 to help mark the unidentified graves and add fences and trees to the Cowessess cemetery.

At the time, Archbishop Bolen said he was hopeful the funds would help move forward some of the Calls to Action of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.
NEW YORK (CNS) — While it does nothing to solve the perennial problem for real-life parents that obedient children rarely have adventures, director Enrico Casarosa’s animated fantasy “Luca” (Disney+) is otherwise a winsome tale full of charm and Italian flair.

Too complicated for tots, who also might be frightened, it’s thoroughly enjoyable fare for all others.

The film’s premise is indeed fantastical since the titular protagonist is a young sea monster (voice of Jacob Tremblay) living in the waters off the coast of Liguria. A gentle shepherd of fish, Luca’s benign nature, like that of all those by whom he’s surrounded, completely belies the threatening moniker humans have given them.

Though timid, Luca is also curious and, with the encouragement of Alberto (voice of Jim Gaffigan), learn of Luca’s secret activities, they threaten to send him to live with his deep seadwelling Uncle Ugo (voice of Sacha Baron Cohen). So Luca and Alberto make a break for it and set off for the nearby town of Portorosso.

There, they befriend Giulia (voice of Emma Berman), a strictly human local girl, and enjoy the hospitality of her fisherman father, Massimo (voice of Marco Barricelli). Plucky Giulia has a long-standing rivalry with arrogant Ercole (voice of Saverio Raimondo), the town bully, who has repeatedly defeated her in Portorosso’s annual triathlon.

Partly for Giulia’s satisfaction and partly to win enough prize money to buy the Vespa they both long to own, Luca and Alberto agree to enter the event as her teammates. But their plan may be thwarted since Daniela and Lorenzo, having taken on human form, are in hot pursuit of their son.

How do we view, use authority?

Today is Independence Day, the anniversary of our beloved country. Today, we celebrate our freedoms - life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. As Catholic Christians, we believe true happiness is found through faith, God's grace, and living according to Christ, who died for the salvation of all people, not just for a few.

Now let's take a look at the readings for this fourteenth Sunday.

How often we are amazed when someone, say, a young kid in shorts, had no idea she would end up as a glamorous singer (or a famous ball player). And if we're on a committee to select a speaker for some important occasion, we are much more inclined to seek out someone from at least a hundred miles away. The inhabitants of Nazareth, especially his relatives, felt the same way about Jesus. Where did He get all this knowledge? As a result, they did not put any faith in Him! Without an environment of faith, Jesus refused to perform miracles for their entertainment, as though He were a vaudeville magician. They were looking for a show, while Jesus wanted them to listen and believe in His Word. To act otherwise would be a betrayal of the power He shared with the Father.

How do we use the authority that God has bestowed on us as public servants, parents, teachers, or employers, foremen or supervisors? Everyone has power over someone (even if it's only the dog). Do we flaunt our authority as though we were responsible for our own excellence? Or worse, do we abuse that authority, causing real harm to those "under" us? We will all be held accountable some day for how gently or how crulely we have acted.

Without real love for those entrusted to our care or guidance, a love that is stronger than the desire for personal advantage or "glory," we will be liable to exceed the boundaries of right relationship. The right use of authority demands discipline and humility, while the right acceptance of that same authority demands trust and respect.

How much was lost by the skeptical Nazarenes who were so lacking in faith. Like so many of us, they had already put Jesus in a little box, dismissing him with the too-easy judgment that they knew him, and knew all they needed to know about him. Jesus was so frustrated and disappointed in them. He had so much that He wished to teach them!

Surely there are important lessons for us from this week's readings. One of the most important is for us to pray that our leaders will be governed by God's laws of justice and mercy.

And we cry "God bless America!"

Recognizing moments of reverence

Something has been bothering me. If you don't mind, I would like to vent for a minute or two about something I have noticed at Mass, not just in the parishes I serve, but in general wherever I travel. That something is a lack of respect, perhaps bordering on disrespect, during the institution narrative and consecration by some folks who just do not know better.

Here's what I am talking about. After the gifts of bread and wine are brought forward by the people, the deacon, representing the community, presents these gifts to the celebrant. The celebrant, in turn, prays over the gifts and then washes his hands, "a rite that is an expression of his desire for interior purification" the General Instruction of the Roman Missal (GIRM) tells us.

Then the priest invites us to join him in prayer over the gifts and prepare for the sacred mystery that is about to occur.

Father says, "the Lord be with you" to us and begins the Eucharistic Prayer. The GIRM says of this part of the Mass, "now the center and summit of the entire celebration begins. The Eucharistic Prayer demands that all listen to it with reverence and silence."

All too often, I have observed, folks do not grasp the importance of what is about to take place.

It is like Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts is a cue to take the kid to bathroom, or for the ushers to reorganize the gathering area or all sorts of other actions that are not consistent with why we came to Mass in the first place and certainly not consistent with the reverence and silence suggested in the GIRM.

"A little before the consecration, a server rings a bell as a signal to the faithful." Some parishes don't bother with that signal. I think that's a mistake.

Before we celebrated Mass in English, when the celebrant had his back to us and said the prayers in a language 99% of us did not know, Latin, that single bell was a true signal. Everything stopped. It was an alert that something important was about to take place.

I remember watching ushers take to one knee. I remember Sister teaching us that if we should happen to be standing along the side or back walls of the church, we should kneel when that bell sounded. I remember folks who, for whatever reason, were sitting after the Sanc tus, shuffling forward in their pew seat to a half-kneeling position. All those actions acknowledged what was about to happen.

Even today, at the sound of the warning bell, the deacon kneels in reverence. That attention getter has purpose and should not be arbitrarily cast aside.

The bell ringing tells us that a holy of holy moments is about to occur. The priest, in the person of Jesus Christ, will transform bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ. The consecration.

And out of the corner of my eye I see little Johnny and his father come back from the bathroom and scoot to their seat oblivious to the miracle that has just taken place.

When I talk about teaching the real presence, re-educating Catholics about the meaning of "do this in memory of me," perhaps we should start with simple etiquette.

Thank you. I feel better.
Prayers and greetings to you as summer begins! How good to connect with you! Know that your prayers and assistance support the vast and great needs of the Mission Church as it provides pastoral care and the Lord’s compassion to the world’s most vulnerable communities.

I write to you today about young men preparing to serve God’s people as priests in Africa, Asia, the Pacific Islands, and remote regions of Europe and Latin America. These current and future missionaries are lacking resources. However, they continue in hope – following where the Lord has called them, especially in these times of pandemic and recovery.

For example, 2,600 seminarians are preparing for the priesthood in India. They join priests and religious who are on the frontlines in the fight against COVID-19, which is devastating that country. Many priests and sisters have given their very lives in this service, victims themselves of the coronavirus. Seminarians in India have also at times faced strong opposition to Christianity. Yet, as one seminarian noted, “we are preparing to be courageous witnesses for Jesus Christ.” As priests, in their celebration of the Eucharist, they will make Christ present in His Body and Blood for the suffering, the persecuted, and the poor.

With your help, the Society for the Propagation of the Faith/Society of St. Peter Apostle supports some 30,000 young men preparing for the priesthood in mission seminaries in India and throughout the Missions. Your donation enables us to provide textbooks, technology, housing, food, and medical care – even at times, beds to rest from studies. In this way, and with your prayers, you will genuinely join these young men as priests as they serve the poor, proclaim the Gospel, build the Church, and celebrate the Sacraments.

These future priests and religious Sisters and Brothers will make Jesus, and His saving works known by their ministries because of your prayer, sacrifice, and devotion. My grateful heart acknowledges your generosity as well, assuring you of my prayers for you and your intentions, as I ask the Lord to be present in your own life’s journeys, as we all continue in hope.

Gratefully in the Lord,

Sister Mary Ellen Brett, SSJ

St. André, ‘has truly been a friend for our family’

Editor’s note: This is the second installment in a series about the North Country’s devotion to St. André Bessette. More installments of this series will appear in future editions of the North Country Catholic.

By Mary Beth Bracy
Contributing Writer

“I was not familiar with the story of St. André Bessette until I moved to New York many years ago,” shared Carolyn Pierce, mother of seminarian Carter Pierce. “My first introduction was through hearing about St. Joseph’s Oratory in Montréal. I made a trip there when my children were very young to see the nativity display there during the Christmas season. I made subsequent trips there with confirmation groups and with family. I was instantly taken with the devotion and humility of André and the miracles worked through his devotion to St. Joseph. The oratory has a palpable sense of holiness.”

It has been said that sometimes it is the saints who chose us to be under their special patronage. “During the year of faith, when the diocese issued ‘passports’ to visit diocesan places on pilgrimage, my children and I made a stop at St. Augustine in Bangor to see the statue of André Bessette and read about his visits to the church,” Pierce said. “Then, after André was canonized, and his relics were brought to St. Mary’s Cathedral, we were at the Mass. At the time, I was dealing with a non-healing wrist fracture, and after Mass, Father Joseph Morgan suggested I venerate the relic for healing. It eventually healed, but I’m not sure it was miraculously. So, I have had a long devotion to André, and to his beloved St. Joseph.”

This was only the beginning of St. Joseph and St. André’s intercession in Pierce’s life.

“When I was pregnant with my youngest son in 2005, the doctors told me he might be born with disabilities,” she said. “I put my child under the protection of Mary and Joseph, praying for the child’s health, and planning to name the child Mary or Joseph at birth. When my son was born, he was perfectly healthy and named Michael Joseph.”

This wasn’t the only time Pierce would pray for intercession on Michael’s behalf.

“Fast forward to 2014 when our family was at a large farm trade show,” she said. “It had been a family tradition to visit the show each summer. We live on a small farm and with five boys and two girls, there was always lots of equipment and demonstrations they loved to see. Even though my older children were in college, we all met there for a family day. At one point, we split up, with the boys going off to see more equipment, and the girls and I heading to the animal exhibits. Just before we joined back together, my youngest son Michael was involved in a terrible accident involving some equipment and sustained very severe head trauma. As I arrived and saw him, I just started telling – maybe shouting – to my family to ‘pray to St. Joseph, pray to St. André.’ The miracles began right away. There was a life flight helicopter and crew nearby, so it was available to fly Michael to Upstate Medical Children’s Hospital. As I followed in a car, I called many people asking for prayers for Michael’s life: one was a dear friend at the cathedral, and I asked her to spread the word to priests and church community and beg for prayers. When Michael arrived at Upstate, there was a surgery crew already there; a special nurse, who was just about to go off duty, stayed to help with the surgery. She came to be a special friend, supporter, and advocate for us during our stay. Michael had surgery for a skull fracture and brain trauma, and we were told it would be several days before we knew if he would survive.”

Michael started his recovery in an Intensive Care Unit before moving on to a pediatric ward and eventually a rehabilitation unit.

“At first, he couldn’t breathe or eat or move,” Pierce said. “Wonderful priests at the hospital came and anointed him several times. Miraculously – because I truly believe that’s what it was – he started to make progress. Even the nurses and doctors later told us that, with his injuries, they didn’t expect he would recover without serious disabilities – if at all. Each follow-up surgery and visit brought more ‘miracle’ reports, from healing of eye problems, no damage to hearing, repairing his skull, walking and talking and eating again.”

The Pierce family’s prayers for the intercession of St. Joseph and St. André continue.

“Today Michael is 15 and has very little residual physical problems,” Pierce said. “He has developed a seizure disorder in the past two years, and we are again appealing to St. André and St. Joseph for healing, blessing Michael with oil from the oratory. In the fall of 2019, Michael, his sister Meaghan and I made a stop at St. Joseph’s Oratory so Michael could see for himself the tomb of St. André and pray in the oratory. Michael will be confirmed this spring and has chosen André for his confirmation name. St. André, and his counsel to go to St. Joseph, has truly been a friend for our family.”

“Jesus said to them, Peace be with you. As the Father has sent me, so I send you.”
And when he had said this, he breathed on them and said to them, “Receive the Holy Spirit.” Jn 20:21
