Pope leads Angelus from hospital

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pilgrims and well-wishers gathered at Rome’s Gemelli hospital to greet Pope Francis as he made his first public appearance in a week after undergoing intestinal surgery.

Appearing on a balcony at the hospital July 11, the pope was greeted with applause and shouts of “Viva il papa” (“Long live the pope”) from the crowd.

“Thank you all,” the pope said. “I have felt your closeness and the support of your prayers. Thank you very much.

Pope Francis arrived at Gemelli hospital July 4 to undergo “a scheduled surgical intervention for a symptomatic diverticular stenosis of the colon,” the Vatican said. The pope has recovered steadily from his surgery and resumed working from the hospital.

In his address, the pope reflected on the Sunday Gospel reading from St. Mark, in which Jesus sent out his disciples to anoint the sick with oil and heal them.

The oil, he said, not only represents the comfort given through the sacramental anointing of the sick, but also symbolizes “the closeness, the care, the tenderness of those who take care of the sick person.”

“It is like a caress that makes you feel better, soothes your pain and cheers you up. All of us, everyone, sooner or later, we all need this ‘anointing’ of closeness and tenderness, and we can all give it to someone else, with a visit, a phone call, a hand outstretched to someone who needs help,” he said.

Pope Francis said that his time in the hospital gave him the opportunity to experience “once again how important good health care is” and that free, universal healthcare, especially for the most vulnerable, is a “precious benefit (that) must not be lost.”
My husband, Adam, sent me a text message with a photo he had taken at an antique store. The photo was of a box full of large, brass numbers, coated with multiple layers of paint. “They’re from the prison in Dannemora,” the text message said. I immediately pushed the button on my phone to voice call my husband. Some conversations just can’t wait for a text message.

“Hello,” Adam answered. “I’m not sure what we’d do with those numbers, but I feel like we need a couple,” I told Adam, completely forgetting any greeting.

“That’s exactly what I was thinking,” Adam responded.

I laughed so loudly it woke up two of my cats (no small accomplishment; I’m pretty sure they could sleep through a nuclear explosion).

“I’m pretty sure neither of us could be married to any other human on the planet,” I told Adam, laughing.

Adam and I had a great weekend together. Our son, Jake, is visiting his grandparents in Watertown for a while, so we’re home alone. We went out for lunch. We ran errands together. We visited my family.

Despite all the good things we did together, this probably 30-second exchange about the brass numbers in a box at an antique store was the highlight of my weekend. It made me laugh. It reminded me that God definitely brought Adam and I together for a reason, even if that reason is that our types of weird align.

It also reminded me how important the little moments can be.

It’s easy for me to fall into the trap of expecting to see God working in big ways. I know he can do that. He can work miracles. He can give us profound moments where we feel his love. But often, experience tells me, God chooses to show his love in small ways – in that awe we experience when we see a beautiful sunrise, in the calm joy we feel when a cool breeze blows on our faces, and in the every-day expressions of love.

But like I had to be willing to see the humor, love and joy in the common weird I share with my husband, we have to choose to cherish the small gifts given to us by our Lord. Those gifts are even better than antique brass numbers with history (though we’re pretty sure the few we purchased will look interesting in our house).

Discovering the Catholic faith

Each year, I am pleasantly surprised by the many persons who decide to become a member of the Catholic Church. They take the time to enter the program that helps them understand the message of the Catholic Church as they prepare themselves to become a Catholic.

These programs are successful because of the dedicated people – the priests and sisters as well as the many dedicated lay men and women – who give their time to teach those who are investigating the Church, showing them the gifts of the Catholic Church. These are very special people who make the programs knowledgeable and enjoyable for those interested, hoping to encourage them to become a Catholic.

I also want to include in this action the many who take the opportunity to invite, to encourage a friend or a loved one to investigate becoming Catholic. There are so many dedicated Catholics who take the time to accompany a friend or loved one on their journey of finding the message of the Catholic Church. These are dedicated and caring people who help others learn the message of Jesus and encourage them to make the decision to become Catholic.

I mention this today because someone reminded me this week of the message of Jesus we find in the Gospels – “the harvest is abundant, but the laborers are few.” The Lord gives so many Christians unique opportunities to lead others to the Church. I believe that each of us can open the doors of the Catholic Church for others and invite them to discover the Lord and to make a decision for Jesus. There are so many wonderful ways to assist others in finding the Lord and the Catholic Church.

Today, I was fortunate to hear the story of a missionary priest who shared his story in his homily at Mass. He told us of his experience in the Sudan. His story was of a time when the government of that region became very oppressive. The government literally drove all the Catholic priests out of the region and closed all of the churches. For 15 years, the people had no priests, no Mass, no sacraments.

When the priests were able to reenter – and they did – this missionary told us that they discovered a people still alive with a deep and powerful faith in God and in being Catholic. They had helped each other to develop a community of faith with a faithful recognition of the importance of being Catholic. When the priests returned the people joined again for Mass and demonstrated their readiness to bring the life of being Catholic alive in their community. The people demonstrated their faithfulness with God and each other. They had lost nothing of being Catholic.

I believe that we will discover the power of the Catholic faith when we come to the end of this pandemic. May all of us, young and old, recognize the importance of our praying together at Mass and the sacraments – a life that is truly spiritual. May our Church recognize with Jesus, “the harvest is great, the laborers are few.” May there be faithful laborers of the Lord working to build a community of faith.

So, we pray that our Catholic faith stays strong for us all and for our communities, for our parishes. We pray there will be an increase in seminarians ready to dedicate their lives to the Lord. We pray there will be priests and deacons for the future of our Church to bring the message of Jesus to our world and to bring the Church’s sacraments to all Catholics. This will demand dedicated and loving disciples.

Jesus calls all of us – clergy and lay Catholics – to be active as members of our Catholic Church. I believe that each of us has many unique opportunities to put new life into our own faith community, our own parish. I believe that the Lord guides us in many wonderful ways to live well as Catholics and to show the world the power of the Catholic faith. Pope John XXIII urged each one of us as a Church to throw open the doors and windows of our Church so that all may recognize the joy and happiness of living as a Catholic.
Supporting the ministry of our missionaries

Dear Friends in Christ,

Missionary enthusiasm has always been a telling sign of the vitality of the Catholic Church in the Diocese of Ogdensburg. The annual collection for the Missionary Projects of the Diocese of Ogdensburg (MPDO) offers us the opportunity to further our own zeal in supporting the ministry of our missionaries who faithfully serve in often forgotten places in our world.

The parishioners of St. Lawrence, Jefferson, and Lewis Deaneries will be given an opportunity to support our missionaries during the weekend Masses of July 24th and 25th. This year, our focus continues to be the Diocese of Latakia in Syria where our twinning initiative continues. Located on the shores of the Mediterranean Sea, Latakia is home to the oldest Christian settlements on earth. Our “Solidarity in Faith” endeavor will provide concrete ways for the faithful of our diocese to learn about Latakia while supporting their relief programs. They are experiencing a large influx of refugees which has doubled their relief efforts but depleted their resources to do so effectively. Our financial sacrifices will assist with their marriage preparation program as well as faith formation programs for children and adults.

The Missionary Projects of the Diocese of Ogdensburg collection will also continue to be used to provide financial support of our former mission in Mollendo, Peru, support the United States Bishops’ annual appeal for Latin America and assist with other missionary projects throughout the world as part of our evangelization efforts.

I am very grateful for your gift to this year’s MPDO collection. God bless you for your generous support of the Church’s missionary efforts.

Faithfully yours in Christ,

Most Reverend Terry R. LaValley
Bishop of Ogdensburg

Knights Make Donation

Bishop Terry R. LaValley accepts a $10,000 donation from New York Knights of Columbus State Deputy Wally Wych at the Annual Bishop’s Burse Dinner hosted by Ogdensburg Council 258 earlier this year. Following the State Deputy’s presentation, Grand Knights and Faithful Navigators representing North Country councils and assemblies presented gifts totaling almost $16,000. The Bishop’s Burse donations will be used to support the education of seminarians and vocations.

JOURNEYS OF LAY MINISTERS ‘HAVE ONLY JUST BEGUN’

By Darcy Fargo
Editor

OGDENSBURG – After two years of classes, work­shops, retreats and discussions, 20 individuals from around the diocese were commissioned by Bishop Terry R. LaValley as lay ministers on June 27.

The commissioning was held in St. Mary’s Cathedral in conjunction with ves­pers, evening prayer of the Liturgy of the Hours.

Catherine Russell, pro­gram coordinator for For­mation for Ministry, kicked off the event sharing a re­flection from one of the individuals who was commissioned.

“One of the candidates shared a reflection that I think pretty well sums up how all of you feel, and I’d like to share it with you right now,” Russel said.

“These past two years have been life changing, to say the least. Throughout this time, I have been blessed with being able to share this experience with my fellow brothers and sisters in Christ, all of whom have become not just my friends but family as well. I thank God for having gifted me with such a loving, charitable and spiritually strong family of believers. Their inspiration and wisdom are the two things I will cherish for the rest of my life. Our jour­neys have only just begun. I pray each of my fellow ministers finds fulfillment and a joyful spirit in carry­ ing out the ministry of Christ in his Church.”

Russel also advised the new ministers to re­member advice given by Pope Francis.

“I just read recently something that Pope Francis said,” Russell said. “He talked about God’s style of pastoral work. He said there are three aspects: closeness, compassion and tenderness. That’s my wish for you 20 candidates: to remember those three words.”

In his homily, Bishop Terry R. LaValley noted that the new ministers are a blessing to the diocese and their parishes.

“We are blessed because you decided to participate in our Formation for Min­istry program,” Bishop LaValley said. “You have taken the time to allow the lord, through his body the Church, to help equip you for discipleship.”

Bishop LaValley encour­aged the newly commis­sioned to exercise their ministry­ies with the joy of the Gospels.

“Saint Paul tells the Corinthians, blessed be God, the God of consola­tion, who encourages, who comforts us so that we may be able to encourage others with the comfort and encouragement we received from our God,” Bishop LaValley said. “The joy of the Gospel fills the hearts and minds of all who encounter Jesus. In his apostolic exhortation, The Joy of the Gospel, the pope encourages the Christian faithful, encourages you and me, to embark on a new chapter, a new chapter of evangeliza­tion marked by this joy while pointing out new paths for the Church’s journey for years to come.”

Bishop LaValley also en­couraged the new minis­ters to cooperate with the Lord and others as they move forward in their min­istries.

“This isn’t a graduation ceremony,” he said. “Far from it. This is a formal, public commitment of your continuing disciple­ship. Never forget that you are commissioned. That is – you’re on mission with your brothers and sisters, members all of the one body of Christ. We never serve alone. Thank you. Thank you for taking the time to learn more about your Catholic faith and for committing to share it with others.”

New director named for deacon formation

By Darcy Fargo
Editor

OGDENSBURG – The formation program for permanent deacons has a new director, but it's not his first time directing the program.

Bishop Terry R. LaValley recently named Msgr. Robert H. Aucoin director of the program. He replaces Deacon John J. Drollette, who is retiring from the position. Deacon Drollette will continue the formation process with the current class of deacons, scheduled to be ordained in October.

Mssr. Aucoin will also continue in his role as Episcopal Vicar for Education and the New Evangelization and as pastor at St. Mary’s in Waddington and St. John the Baptist in Madrid.

Mssr. Aucoin said he previously directed the program when it was centered at Wadhams Hall, and he was the rector of the seminary college.

"At one time, the deacon formation program was sort of housed at Mater Dei College," Mssr. Aucoin said. "When Mater Dei closed, it came to Wadhams Hall. Many of the teachers in the program were already teachers at Wadhams... Bishop Barbarito was the bishop at the time, and it was suggested that he just let Wadhams run the deacon formation program, since the majority of the teachers were from Wadhams. He needed someone at Wadhams to run the program. I was rector at Wadhams, so I ended up becoming director."

Mssr. Aucoin noted that Wadhams Hall closed in 2002, and it was then that deacon formation program was developed as it exists now, with participants taking both in-person and online courses.

"Under Bishop Barbarito first and then Bishop Cunningham, we designed the program as it exists right now," Mssr. Aucoin said. "When Wadhams closed, many of the teachers were moved, since they would no longer be at Wadhams. We then went with a mix of online courses and on-site courses. It's been operating that way since 2003ish."

The online courses are taught by University of Notre Dame in Indiana.

"There are some courses that we cannot get online — Canon Law, public speaking, liturgy practicums," Mssr. Aucoin said. "Those courses aren't readily available in the same format as the other courses."

One of the advantages to the Notre Dame program, Mssr. Aucoin explained, is that the course offerings are known years in advance, allowing the program to plan its curriculum and fill any identified course gaps.

Knowledge of future course offerings has been especially helpful as the program plans for its next round of candidates.

“Right now, we have nine people who have applied,” Mssr. Aucoin said. “I’d like to see that number bigger.”

To participate in the permanent deacon formation candidates must first complete the Formation for Ministry program. The deacon formation is then a four-year program, starting with a year that's primarily focused on discernment and foundational knowledge.

“The program is funded by the Bishop’s Fund in great measure,” Mssr. Aucoin said. “The candidates come on Friday evening. We start with Evening Prayer, a course on Friday night and social hour. On Saturday morning, there's Morning Prayer, Mass, breakfast, two courses, lunch, two courses, Evening Prayer, and we’re done.”

In addition to running the next class of deacon candidates, Mssr. Aucoin said he'll also be working with a diocesan committee formed to codify the diocesan formation process.

“Our program as it exists has never been formalized on paper,” he said. “One of the tasks is to work with the committee to formalize the program of deacon formation for the Diocese of Ogdensburg. The (USCCB) document speaks in broad terms, but we need something specific to the Diocese of Ogdensburg. Other dioceses, like us, don’t have formalized written documents. The formation process was just passed on from generation to generation. They, too, are in the process of formalizing their formation programs.”

Mssr. Aucoin said he also hopes to evaluate the Notre Dame program to ensure the course offerings align with diocesan goals and meet the program's needs.

"We get comfortable with the way we're doing things, and it might not always be the best way," he said. "I've been away from the course offerings for about 10 years. I'd like to see what they're offering and see what resources we have for courses we need to teach locally."

Mostly, though, Mssr. Aucoin is looking forward to working with the formation candidates and program.

"I'm glad to be involved in it again," he said. "Deacon John Drollette did a wonderful job. He'll be leaving the program to retire. His predecessor, Deacon John White, did a great job, too. I'm looking forward to getting into it and seeing the best way to form deacons. Our deacons are engaged in more and more ministerial efforts. We need that help, along with the help of the lay people who come from the Formation for Ministry program. We need a strong formation program to begin with. The candidates in it continue to the deacon program and have that strong formation background."

SACKETS HARBOR – While her parents weren’t Catholic and didn’t attend any church, Anne Thomas’ faith grew from a seed planted by her father and a flower.

“We had the Bible read to us, but we didn’t go to church,” said Thomas, a parishioner of St. Andrew’s Church in Sacket’s Harbor. “Mother was Episcopalian. Dad’s family was Methodist, but my grandfather had some sort of falling out with the church, and dad didn’t like to go to church very much. We grew up in Shenango County, which is very rural. There was this little Congregational Church. As kids, we used to go whenever the mood struck us and participate in the kids’ stuff... My parents were moderately religious. I think they were people of faith. One of my earliest remembrances, I can never get it out of my head, I think was the seed or root of something. I was the next to the youngest of seven, and I loved to follow dad around the farm. My mom would say, ‘you have sons to be out there, why do you have to have my daughter out there?’ But I loved to be out there. I must’ve been about five or six years old. I was out helping – I probably wasn’t helping that much – dad fix fences down in the pasture, and I brought him a flower I picked. He stopped what he was doing and showed me the flower, showed me every part. He said, ‘who but a great God could create anything so perfect?’ That stuck in my mind forever. I think it’s the root of my faith.”

As she grew into an adult, Thomas said she tried several different denominations as she “searched for a church home.” It was when she attended nursing school near the New York City metro area when she was exposed to Catholicism.

“I wanted to be an airline hostess,” she said, smiling. “Back then, in order to be an airline hostess, you had to be a nurse. When I checked into it further, I learned there was also a size requirement to be an airline hostess. You had to be between 5-foot-2 and 5-foot-5. I never made it to 5’2. “I figured, oh well. I might as well be a nurse.” She attended a nursing school in Westchester County. She chose the school because it didn’t charge tuition. Nurses at the school trained while working in an affiliated hospital.

“Where I grew up, there were hardly any Catholics,” Thomas said. “We used to laugh about it. When we had release time, there was a Protestant teacher – non-denominational – who would come in and teach us religion. There were a couple Catholic kids who had to go down to the boiler room for instruction. I had next to no contact with Catholics. Being outside New York City in nursing school, a lot of my classmates were Catholic. I started going to Mass with them every now and then. It was intriguing. It was all in Latin. I had no idea what was going on, but I just knew there was something there. I really can’t say what it was. I just felt that this was where I was going to feel comfortable. I started taking instruction to become Catholic.”

Once she discovered her new faith, Thomas said she threw herself into it.

“I had searched it out, and I found where I was home,” she said. “Once I landed in the Catholic Church, I didn’t want to be just a social Catholic. I don’t think I had been in the Church very long when I started out teaching religious ed. I learned the most about my faith teaching it to kids. If I wasn’t working and I had time, I taught religious ed for years. When Father (Douglas G.) Comstock was here, I became the religious ed coordinator.”

Thomas was part of the first Formation for Ministry class, graduating in 1992, right around the time she took over the religious education program at her parish.

“I hadn’t chosen catechism as my main focus; I chose family,” she said. “I was able to go to some of the catechism workshops later. I had been working with kids, so I gave it a try. It worked out pretty good, if I do say so myself. I had a lot of fun.”

Thomas said she also grew in her relationship with the Lord through Madonna House, an apostolate “of Christian lay men, women, and priests, striving to incarnate the teachings of Jesus Christ by forming a community of love.” She was introduced to the community by Father William G. “Bill” Muench.

“Madonna House was a big part of the foundation of my faith,” she said. “When you go there, there are mirrors all over the place. Every mirror says, ‘I am third.’ God is first. You’re second. I am third. I really believe that, and I try to live it. I don’t always manage it perfectly, but that’s where I’m at.”

Now, at age 93, Thomas continues to nurture her faith by learning about it.

“I’m a secular Francis,” she said. “I have been for 30 years. I also read a lot. I do a lot of spiritual reading. I pray the rosary. It took me a long time to get into praying the rosary.”

That faith she’s worked with the Lord to grow has helped her through many difficult times, Thomas said.

“In 1969, our son, a senior in high school, took off and left a note,” she said. “He was heading out with one of his buddies. They didn’t know where they were going. He thought maybe California. I was crushed. I didn’t know what to do. I didn’t know where my kid was. There were drugs all over the place.”

Thomas found peace in the situation when she attended Mass, then being held in a gym after a fire at Sacred Heart in Watertown.

“I was sitting in the top tier of bleachers,” she said. “It was the responsorial Psalm. The 34th Psalm. I know it every time I hear it. ‘The Lord is close to the broken hearted, the crushed in spirit he saves.’ The tears were about to flow. It just grabbed me. It wasn’t the person who was
August is Make-A-Will Month

Having a Will not only ensures that your wishes are carried out after your passing, but it also protects your loved ones from potentially lengthy and expensive proceedings. Common misconceptions of making a Will are you think you are too young; you think creating one is too expensive, and you believe that your possessions will immediately go to your next of kin.

With August being National Make-A-Will month, what better time to stop putting off something that has been on your mind for a while now and begin the process. Creating an estate plan does not have to be expensive and without one the state will determine what happens to your property, and your wishes of what you may want specifically left to family or charitable organizations may be ignored.

For many years now, the Diocese of Ogdensburg, many of its parishes and schools and other institutions within the Diocese have been remembered through bequests from people who thought it was a good idea to have a Will or Estate Plan and make a lasting difference to the Church that they loved.

If after prayerfully considering you are thinking you want to leave a gift with the Diocese, beneficiary choices can include: your parish, your Catholic school, education of seminarians, priests retirement fund, priests disability fund, the Bishop's Fund, Catholic Charities, missionary Projects of the Diocese, St. Joseph's Nursing Home, the Diocese of Ogdensburg, the Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Ogdensburg, or any diocesan institution/ministry of your choice.

If you would like more information on Wills and beneficiary choices within the Diocese of Ogdensburg, contact the executive director of Development Scott Lalone at 315-393-2920 or slalone@rcdony.org.

reading. God was speaking to me.”

Thomas said her faith also helped her through other family difficulties, as well as through the isolation of the coronavirus pandemic and an injury she faced around the same time.

A little over a year ago, Thomas fell and broke her arm. After a prolonged period of attempting other means of healing, she underwent surgery on the arm.

“I had to learn it was ok to have people do things for me, and it was ok for me to not be in charge,” she said. “It was ok to be 92 and a half years old with a broken arm and just let it be. After I broke my arm, they transferred me to (a rehabilitation facility) to make sure I could handle things on my own before I went home. It was right after COVID started. Nobody could come to see me. It made me feel sorry for myself. It made me really aware of how terrible it is for people in nursing homes without family members there for them. Also when COVID hit, I was no longer able to go to church. It made me realize how very, very much I needed the Eucharist. People said I could watch it on television. I couldn’t get Communion on television. Besides, I don’t have a television. It was very, very hard. That was about the bottom for me. I don’t get depressed easily, but that really got to me.”

Now, Thomas is able to get to Mass and serve at Mass again, and she’s grateful to God for getting her through the recent hard times.

“My faith has taken me through every hard, difficult time in my life,” Thomas concluded. “It wasn’t taken away, but it’s taken me through. My faith has shown me and proved to me that God is right there with me. I never have to be alone. I never have to be afraid.”
Augustinian students care for God’s creation

Editor’s Note: The following was submitted by fifth-grade students at Augustinian Academy in Carthage as part of their “Pope Francis Caring for Our Common Home Green Apple Award” submission. The awards were given to individuals, classes, organizations and youth groups for projects that promote collaboration in care for God’s creation. Students at Augustinian Academy also planted a butterfly garden, recycled shirts into shoulder bags and built garden boxes for their families.

The girls in the fifth-grade class of Carthage Augustinian Academy think of each other as family. We also think that we should be taking care of God’s great green earth. We all know that the Lord gave us this earth and we should take care of it so that the future generations can have the same beautiful world that so many people have had before them. Our names are Aubree, Ali, Alexis, Aubryana, and Mariella, but there have been many other people that have helped us. We want to inspire people all over the world to take care of our earth.

It all started when we were in fourth grade. We heard about wildfires in Australia. None of us thought that we could help out until we started researching and learning more about things we could do.

We chose raising money. So we went to our awesome principal and asked if we could start raising money. She happily said yes and we started. We made posters, a slideshow, and things we would sell.

We decided to make small pockets out of old jeans instead of buying new fabric. We hand sewed them or we used our own sewing machine. All though it took a lot of time we made them with all of our hearts. We really worked hard and it paid off. We raised over 200 dollars! One of our teachers donated 100 dollars! We were really proud of our school and how much money we made. We donated the money to the Australian Zoo. They would try and help save as many animals as possible.

This year in science, we learned about pollution. It did not sit well in our minds. We decided that we needed to do something to help stop pollution. So like the year before we went to our great principal and asked if we could start raising money. Without hesitation she said yes. Before we started we needed to find a good website to donate to. After looking for a while, we finally found the Marine Conservation Institute. We began making pockets, but we thought that people might want something else. So we started thinking about other things that people might want. We came up with clay pencil toppers and rubber band animals and food.

So we started selling our items and have reached our goal of 75 dollars. We gave presentations to the younger kids, so that they could learn about how horrible pollution is to the world around us. We knew that they were going to have a huge impact on the next generation. They asked questions and got involved with it. It was great seeing people engage in helping the planet.

Like the years before, we are hoping that we can raise money again next year. Maybe we could raise money for the Humane Society and make small dog pillows. Or we could donate to the Pencils of Promise and sell cool pencil toppers. Or even raise money for a local food pantry and we could sell pockets with different foods on it. We will do anything we can to help God’s earth. We hope that the next generation of people will fight for the greater good. We are excited to see how much money we will raise and what will happen in our future. One little kid asked us how they could help.

This shows that kids are standing up to these horrible problems. If only there could be more people like that young kid, this world might just be a whole lot better.

This is only the beginning for us. Although some of us are moving or changing schools we will always be family and want to change the world for the better.

In our future we want to help people stop all the bad things in the world. We are so grateful for our principal and for our awesome school, for all of those who have inspired us to do this. We are extremely grateful for those who helped us with this idea.

We would like to win this award not to brag about it, but to inspire people to love this world, just like we do. We really love this world and appreciate all the gifts that God has given us. Our slogan is, “Save the World, it is the Only One We Got!” And we believe that is true.

Augustinian Academy fifth-grade students Alicia Eldridge, Alexis Walseman, Aubryana Wood, Mariella Eddy and Aubree Brown show the poster they made as part of their Green Apple Award project.

WASHINGTON (CNS) — As news events made headlines across the United States for months last year — particularly the 2020 election, the coronavirus pandemic and racism in America — priests’ homilies did not mention these events nearly as much as did sermons by Protestant preachers, according to a report issued July 8 by the Pew Research Center.

Compared to their Protestant counterparts — whatever the stripe, be it mainline, evangelical or historically Black — Catholics brought up the rear when it came to sharing at least one sermon about the election last fall. Overall, 67% of churches did, but just 41% of Catholics. And just 19% of Catholic parish websites mentioned the election, compared to 28% of all churches surveyed.

While 20% of Catholics’ election-referenced homilies encouraged voting — on par with all Christian sermons surveyed — just 36% discussed issues, candidates or political parties, the lowest percentage of all Christian groups.

During the time period studied — which not only included the election but the pandemic and months of racial protests spurred by the murder of George Floyd by a Minneapolis police officer — Catholics came up last in those two categories as well.

While 69% of Catholic parishes heard at least one sermon relating to COVID-19, at least 82% of other Christian denominations registered hearing a sermon on it. And just 32% of Catholics heard a sermon mentioning racism, while 44% of Protestant Christians did.

The Pew study, "Pastors Often Discussed Election, Pandemic and Racism in Fall of 2020," conducted its analysis is based on the texts of 12,832 sermons shared online by 2,143 U.S. religious congregations — nearly all of them Christian churches — delivered between Aug. 31 and Nov. 8, 2020, a period Pew noted that included the presidential election and the Sunday following Election Day.

Pew's data set includes sermons from 438 evangelical Protestant congregations, 388 mainline Protestant congregations, 235 Catholic parishes and 205 historically Black Protestant congregations.

Pew said the remaining congregations could not be reliably classified, beyond to other Christian traditions such as Orthodox Christian denominations, or belong to other faiths.

"There are a couple of fundamentals at work" on why Catholic mentions of topics in the news may not be as prominent in sermons as those by Protestants, said Dennis Quinn, a computational social scientist for Pew, who was the principal researcher for the study and a similar one based on sermon texts from 2019.

The Mass, Quinn said, will "by definition be more structured than the services of other groups. That reduces the opportunity for this happening, like an election" mention. Also, "Catholic homilies are by and large shorter than the sermons or homilies of other groups," he noted, which means priests have "substantially less time" to get a point across.

"Even among Catholics who were the least likely to talk about the three topics we look at in the study, fewer than half of the congregations at least touched on the election," Quinn told Catholic News Service in a July 7 phone interview.

"All else aside, Americans were essentially deluged with information in 2020 about the issues that dominated the airwaves. We can see that the hours spent in the pew was not a respite from that informational deluge," he said.

The 36-page study was split fairly evenly between the results and the methodology.

"Among the congregations included in this study for which researchers were able to identify a religious tradition, 52% were evangelical Protestant; 22% were mainline Protestant; 4% were Catholic; and 1% were historically Black Protestant churches," the Pew study said.

Quinn noted they were weighted to more closely reflect each faith group's spending in the pews was not nearly all of them.

"There are several cases where congregations, denominations and faith-based organizations — including several women's religious communities — have urged the Vatican to repudiate the Doctrine of Discovery, which asserts European Christianity's superiority and power over other lands. Bishop Lucia appears to be the first U.S. Catholic bishop to publicly call for the Vatican and the U.S. Catholic Church to acknowledge the damage those documents caused and apologize for harming Indigenous peoples in the United States. Beginning with the 1452 "Dum Diversas," several papal bulls outline directives Christian nations and European monarchs used to condone conquest of the Americas and other lands. "Basically, it was taking away the right to ownership. Literally. It was subjugating them. They became second-class citizens," Bishop Lucia told The Catholic Sun, the diocesan newspaper. "Today we talk about white supremacy. This was white supremacy."

Bishop supports apology on bulls that justified oppression

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (CNS) — Bishop Douglas J. Lucia, whose downtown Syracuse office sits on the ancestral lands of the Onondaga Nation, hopes to meet with Pope Francis "to re-examine" 15th-century Vatican documents that justified colonization, land takeovers and oppression of Indigenous peoples. In the last decade, numerous congregations, denominations and faith-based organizations — including several women’s religious communities — have urged the Vatican to repudiate the Doctrine of Discovery, which asserts European Christianity’s superiority and power over other lands. Bishop Lucia appears to be the first U.S. Catholic bishop to publicly call for the Vatican and the U.S. Catholic Church to acknowledge the damage those documents caused and apologize for harming Indigenous peoples in the United States. Beginning with the 1452 "Dum Diversas," several papal bulls outline directives Christian nations and European monarchs used to condone conquest of the Americas and other lands. "Basically, it was taking away the right to ownership. Literally. It was subjugating them. They became second-class citizens," Bishop Lucia told The Catholic Sun, the diocesan newspaper. Pope names relator general for 2023 synod

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Pope Francis has chosen Cardinal Jean-Claude Hollerich of Luxembourg to serve as relator general of the Synod of Bishops on synodality. The appointment of Cardinal Hollerich, who also serves as president of the Commission of Bishops’ Conferences of the European Union, was announced by the Vatican July 8. The relator is responsible for providing a comprehensive outline of the synod’s theme at the beginning of the meeting and for summarizing the speeches of synod members before work begins on concrete proposals for the pope. The theme chosen by the pope for the next synod is: “For a synodal church: communion, participation and mission.” Cardinal Mario Grech, secretary-general of the Synod of Bishops, told Vatican News in May that, although originally scheduled for 2022, the synod will take place in October 2023 to allow for broader consultation at the diocesan, national and regional level.

FEAST DAY CELEBRATION

St. Patrick’s Parish in Colton celebrated the Feast of Saints Peter & Paul with Mass at St. Paul's Oratory in South Colton, concelebrated by Father Joseph W. Giroux, Father John L. “Jack” Downs and Father Andrew J. Amyot. Mass was followed by a procession with song and prayer at the Sacred Heart Shrine and an ice cream social. Father Giroux was also welcomed as the new pastor of the parish at the event. (Left) Father Giroux celebrates Mass at St. Paul’s Oratory. (Right) Father Downs and Father Amyot enjoy a snack and social time at the Feast of Saints Peter & St. Paul.

AT THE MOVIES

THE BOSS BABY: FAMILY BUSINESS

NEW YORK (CNS) – Its chaotic plot and somewhat colicky disposition may leave viewers of the sequel "The Boss Baby: Family Business" (Universal) wishing the stork had stayed home this time.

Admittedly, there’s little to object to in returning director Tom McGrath’s follow-up to his 2017 animated comedy, at least for teens and grown-ups. Yet the movie’s laughs are few, its pace frenetic and its tone irritating.

Decades, rather than mere years, have passed for the two main characters of the first film, brothers Tim (voice of James Marsden) and Ted (voice of Alec Baldwin) Templeton. Now grown to maturity, the pair – whose rivalry-turned-partnership was charted in the kickoff – also have become estranged.

Tim is a dedicated husband (his spouse, Carol, is voiced by Eva Longoria) and father of two girls. Ted, by contrast, is a hard-driving unmarried tycoon too busy to nurture relations with his relatives. Instead, he contents himself with buying them lavish presents.

The odd-couple siblings are compelled to work together, however, after Tim's infant daughter, Tina (voice of Amy Sedaris) – who is inexplicably endowed, as was her Uncle Ted at her age, with some of the attributes of an adult – learns of a plot to disrupt family life worldwide.

The maniacal genius behind this scheme is none other than Dr. Erwin Armstrong (voice of Jeff Goldblum), the principal of the school Tina’s older sister, prodigiously smart Tabitha (voice of Ariana Greenblatt), attends. To enable Tim and Ted to infiltrate this establishment, Tina provides them with a magic potion that temporarily returns them to the ages they were in the original.

Goldblum evokes smiles with his scattered, wandering mad scientist act. But, for the most part, the rest of the humor falls flat.

A few lapses into language unsuitable for kids prevents endorsement for kids prevents endorsement for the youngest movie fans. And viewers of faith may be vaguely irked by a scene in which Tabitha seems at first to be saying bedtime prayers but instead turns out to be reciting the elements from the periodic table that hangs above her bed.

Otherwise, this is a harmless, though poorly crafted, picture, derived, like its predecessor (and the Netflix series "Boss Baby: Back in Business"), from the work of author and illustrator Marla Frazee. Michael McCullers' script does promote teamwork and clan unity. But such positive values get lost amid breakneck action scenes seemingly designed to paper over a storyline as thin as it is erratic.

The film contains perilous situations, a mild oath and at least one crass term. The Catholic News Service classification is A-II – adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association rating is PG – parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children.

Ideas on good, bad shepherds

The men who have written letters to Bishop Terry LaValley requesting ordination as permanent deacons will be on retreat in a couple of weeks. They will leave the retreat hungry for food or complaining about the accommodations. Before you rush off to look-up Canon 1039, it says “all candidates for any order are to make a spiritual retreat for at least five days. Before the bishop proceeds to ordination, he must be certain that the candidates properly made this retreat.” The three orders of clerical state are deacon, priest, and bishop.

In clergy shorthand, this is the “canonical retreat” called for in 1039. Rev. Simeon Gallagher, a Franciscan priest, is the retreat master. I thought the readings for next Sunday appropriately prepare the candidates for their retreat. The reading from the prophet, Jeremiah, warns clerics to be extra careful about what they say and do as ordained ministers of the Church. “Woe to the shepherds who mislead and scatter the flock of my pasture,” says the Lord.

The candidates will do well to meditate on the awesome responsibility that comes with ordination. The commentary on the canon says a candidate “should enter the clerical state with a humble spirit, appreciative of how he will need to rely upon the Lord’s constant care for him.”

In the Gospel, Mark tells us that Jesus recognized the need for a retreat from the pressures of daily life sometimes. He told his disciples when they returned from their mission trips, “come away by yourselves to a deserted place and rest a while.” Jesus often took off to be alone to meditate and pray. The retreatants welcome your prayers for them, for their families, for those in the flock they will eventually serve as deacons.

Deacon Kevin Mastellon ministers in Watertown. He is the Director of Permanent Deacons for the Diocese of Ogdensburg.
Aid for vaccines for poor countries

Article by FIDES news service of the Pontifical Mission Societies

The Archdiocese of Seoul has sent US $1 million to the Holy See to ensure equal access to Covid-19 vaccines for poor countries and populations in need. The donation is the result of a fundraising campaign carried out in the Archdiocese of Seoul. The campaign aimed to raise awareness among the faithful and all citizens to ensure equitable, timely and universal access to Covid-19 vaccines for all the countries of the world. Funds were raised by 234 parishes and organizations in Seoul at the initiative and coordination of the "One Body One Spirit Movement" ecclesial movement born on the occasion of the 44th International Eucharistic Congress held in Seoul in 1989.

The initiative was launched in recent months in line with the exhortation of Pope Francis to guarantee universal access to vaccines. For this reason, the Bishops’ Conference of Korea (CBCK) decided to launch the "Vaccine Sharing Campaign" at its general assembly last spring. The campaign aimed to raise awareness and offer a direct contribution to help the universal distribution of vaccines in the world, especially in the poorest countries. The organizers recalled that Pope Francis and the Holy See have launched an appeal to the rich nations of the world to ensure that anti-Covid vaccines are available as soon as possible for people living in poor countries.

Adding to this concern, Cardinal Andrew Yeom Soo-jung, Archbishop of Seoul, launched a public appeal to raise funds encouraging the faithful to make donations.

Father Matthias Young-yup Hur, spokesman for the Archdiocese of Seoul, stated in a message sent to Fides by the Archdiocesan Communication Office: "We are very concerned about the fact that the gap between rich and poor countries has widened during the coronavirus pandemic. All the faithful in Seoul sincerely hope that this fundraising campaign will be a small step to overcoming obstacles together."

The campaign will last until November 27, 2021, the last day of the Jubilee of the 200th anniversary of the birth of Saint Andrew Kim Tae-gon, the first Korean Catholic priest and patron saint of Korea.

The organization is guaranteed above all thanks to the presence of the volunteers of the "One Body One Spirit Movement," committed to "working to create a world of peace according to the spirit of the Sacrament of the Eucharist." Started by the late Cardinal Stephen Kim Sou-hwan in 1988, the movement is now an active part of the Caritas Seoul network, and operates in many fields such as international development cooperation and social services.
