Pope: Seminaries do not form ‘supermen’

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — The mission of a seminary "is not to form 'supermen' who pretend to know and control everything," but to help seminarians become priests who are humble servants of the communities they continue to belong to, Pope Francis said.

"The Lord calls some of his disciples to be priests, that is, he chooses some of the sheep from his flock and invites them to be shepherds of their brothers and sisters," the pope wrote in a speech prepared for a group of rectors and seminary staff members in Latin America.

As priests, "we are fellow disciples of the rest of the Christian faithful and, therefore, we share the same human and spiritual needs, just as we are subject to the same frailties, limitations and errors," he wrote in the text he handed to the group Nov. 10 before speaking to them off the cuff.

"The gifts of grace and the traits of a wounded nature," marked by a tendency to sin, are normal parts of the life of every baptized person and are present in the seminarians as well, the pope wrote, so seminary training needs to help them become aware of both as they grow in faith and basic human maturity.

Pope Francis urged the rectors and seminary staff to help candidates for the priesthood learn "to read their own history" with the eyes of faith, seeing how and where God was at work and where they may have gone astray.

The rector and staff also must recognize that the way they live their own lives has a big impact on the seminarians. Candidates for the priesthood should be able to see how "a healthy human maturation" involves overcoming difficulties and periods of crisis through a constant renewal of faith and reliance on the Lord, the pope wrote.

Since "one of the indicators of human and spiritual maturity is the development and consolidation of the ability to listen and the art of dialogue," he said, and those "are naturally anchored in a life of prayer, where the priest enters into daily dialogue with the Lord, even in moments of aridity or confusion."
The same conversation took place between me and my son nearly every Sunday for three years. Me: Jake, I have no clue what I'm writing about for my column this week. Jake: Write about Jesus. Me: Ummm... that's not very specific. What about Jesus? Jake: I don't know. That's your problem. And it was my problem. But that conversation wasn't a problem. I always found it rather endearing. Not quite so endearingly, I've always had a bad habit of doing things at the last minute. That habit and a 5 p.m. Sunday deadline made it easy for me to push the last of my work on this newspaper column – almost always this column – until Sunday morning, sometimes early Sunday afternoon, when I’d finish from my home office (a corner in our living room). In addition to creating a lot of chaotic mornings, my Sunday morning work created the routine of that conversation with Jake. Now, after not having that conversation for the last five weeks, I miss it.

So why are we not having that conversation? As of the Nov. 9 edition, our print date has moved, and the NCC is now being printed on Friday evenings.

A creature of habit, I dreaded the print date move. I was afraid I’d struggle to adjust my workflow. I was afraid I’d miss deadline, something I’ve never done in nearly 15 years in journalism. We, the NCC staff, reporters, columnists and photographers, practiced for a month before the actual “go live” on the new deadline. I can’t tell you how many times I prayed it would all go smoothly, but I still feared it wouldn’t.

While I miss the conversation with Jake, God has turned this situation that filled me with dread into a blessing. Because I don’t have the option of pushing work to the weekend, I have more time on Sunday mornings to enjoy coffee and quiet time, to spend with “my two men,” my husband and son, and to better prepare for Mass to and to receive Jesus in the Eucharist.

God has a beautiful way of turning what I initially see as a struggle into a gift. And that same thing has been happening for much longer than three years.

During the month of November, we are rushing toward the end of the Catholic liturgical year. Our liturgical year ends with the Sunday Feast Day of Christ the King. Then we begin the new Liturgical Year with the time of Advent, our preparation for Christmas.

Today, I believe this is a good time to remember what we mean when we talk about being Church, our Catholic Church. Each day as we pause to pray as the Church, we must unite ourselves to our Lord Jesus. This month, we celebrate Jesus as Christ the King. We dedicate ourselves to our Lord by making him our King – the King of our life – so we ask him to be our leader, our guide, our king each day.

You and I don’t talk about kings here in our country. Now, I do know that some make a person the king in sports or in music or something like that. When we talk about our Church leaders, we refer to our pope or our bishops. However, as Church, we find our strength and power in the Lord Jesus, our Lord and Savior. On this feast day, we pay honor to our Lord by announcing to the world that Jesus is our king.

I want to use this feast day as an opportunity to remember what it means when we say that we are Church, the Church of Jesus Christ. For me, I believe that we must go back to the Second Vatican Council, especially the Dogmatic Constitution on the Church (Lumen Gentium). This document begins by reminding us that as Church we are the people of God.

In this regard, here is a sentence from this document: “At all times and in every race, anyone who fears God and does what is right has been acceptable to God. He has, however, willed to make all holy and save them, not as individuals without any bond or link between them but rather uniting them as a people who might acknowledge them and save them in holiness." We are a people, the People of God.

This document of the council spends time to remind us that the Church is first the clergy, the priests and the bishops. The council teaches us that the eternal pastor set up the holy Church by entrusting the apostles with their mission as he himself had been sent by the Father. Jesus willed that their successors, the bishops namely, should be the shepherds in his Church until the end of the world.

There is much more we could investigate about our clergy, but for now I would like to remind you of how the council emphasized the importance of the laity – you, lay men and lay women. The heart and soul of our Church is always the laity. The Church depends on the dedication and the evangelizing power of the laity. Each day, lay Catholics bring the message of our Savior, the message of our Church, to more people than the clergy is ever able to do so. I firmly believe that the Lord Jesus challenges all men and lay women, bringing into their lives opportunities to help another or to lead another closer to the Lord Jesus.

The council writes this: “All the laity, then, have the exalted duty of working for the ever-greater spread of the divine plan of salvation to all, of every epoch and all over the earth.”

All of this — this Catholic Church, this People of God — is a call to holiness for all peoples, all races, all cultures on this planet. Today, I finish with one more sentence from this Constitution: “It is therefore quite clear that all Christians in any state or walk of life are called to the fullness of Christian life and to the perfection of love, and by this holiness a more human manner of life is fostered in the earthly society.”
Adoption story: ‘We feel like the blessed ones’

By Mary Beth Bracy
Contributing writer

Deacon Brent Davison, a New York State Police officer, and his wife Nikki, a registered nurse, selflessly share God’s love in serving their family and the North Country community, especially at Holy Cross Parish in Plattsburgh. As we celebrate National Adoption Month, they shared about their experience and joy in welcoming more children into their home.

“Brent and I have a blended family,” Nikki Davison explained. “I have two children from a prior marriage. We have two children together, and then we adopted three children. We have a total of seven children ranging in age from 32 to 7. We already also have six beautiful grandchildren. I had a very close family growing up, and we are still close. Family traditions and family times were very important to my parents as well. That is history,” shared Deacon Davison.

That changed in 2013 when the Davison’s watched “The Bible” series on TV. Deacon Brent Davison commented that he and Nikki had a conversation after viewing the series and came back to Church.

Nikki Davison related what happened when they returned to the faith.

“When Brent and I came back into the Church, Monsignor (Dennis J.) Duprey connected us with Starr Burke as our catechist. We became fast friends. Starr mentioned the need for foster parents. Both my parents and Brent’s grandparents were foster parents many, many years prior. So, we signed up to take the classes. We were planning on doing respite care. Brent was not 100% onboard at first partly because of our already hectic schedule with our already growing family, partly due to his job.”

“I prayed and asked that if it was God’s will for us that he place it on my heart also, and the rest is history,” shared Deacon Davison.

Participating in a Cursillo Weekend in 2014 was also a transformative experience in their faith journey.

“When attending my Cursillo weekend, it became apparent to me this was the right choice for us,” Nikki Davison added. “Cursillo allows you to share faith with many fellow Christians close to Christ and better hear God’s call,” Deacon Davison added. “Our Cursillo friends have always been very supportive of our decision to foster and ultimately adopt our children Marissa, James, and Timothy (Joey). We trust God will accompany us on this journey.”

The Davison’s began fostering their children in 2014.

“Marissa was adopted in March 2016,” Deacon Davison said. “James and Timothy (Joey) were adopted in November 2019. The kids have all been baptized since being adopted, and the two older kids made their First Communion.”

Timothy (Joey) will make his next spring.

There are numerous blessings in fostering and adopting children, the couple said.

“I believe seeing these children and what obstacles they have overcome, where they were and how they adapt and persevere was both rewarding and eye opening,” Nikki Davison said. “I have learned grace and much humility as well, as what a humbling experience this has been. We feel like the blessed ones to be able to give these children homes with the support and love from us as well as our Catholic faith.”

Naturally, there are some challenges as well.

“We have had to start over raising children again, which is not always easy, but by God’s grace we get by,” said Deacon Davison. “Obviously we could not have done any of this without the grace of Jesus Christ and the support of our family and friends.”

“I would be happy to talk with anyone considering fostering and adopting,” Nikki Davison added. “I co-taught the foster parent classes as a parent liaison with the foster parenting staff at Department of Social Services (DSS). Fostering at times was very difficult and frustrating as well as rewarding. As the foster parent, you are acting as the child’s advocate, but you are not the parent. That was a tough pill to swallow. The staff and caseworker from DSS we had were excellent, and we worked well together. That made the job a bit easier.”

God’s love is clearly reflected in the Davison family. At church, they are always greeting others and helping in the parish. Deacon Davison often helps at the Masses, and the Davison children are altar servers.

Deacon Davison encourages others to be open to the possibility of opening their hearts and homes to children in need.

“Some people just can't (have children),” he said. “There is a huge need for foster parenting, and this can also give those parents a chance to experience the love of a family with children. It is a calling and like other callings. You just have to be listening.”
Enrollment increases at Ohio seminary

Fall brought the arrival of 20 new seminarians to Pontifical College Josephinum in Columbus, Ohio, an overall enrollment increase, and two new sending dioceses.

The seminary now serves 15 (arch)dioceses and religious orders: Birmingham, Cincinnati, Columbus, Fathers of Mercy, Gaylord, Jefferson City, Joliet, Kiyinda-Mityana (Uganda), Lugazi (Uganda), Oakland, Ogdensburg, Saint Thomas in the Virgin Islands, Santa Fe, Steubenville, and Wheeling Charleston.

The Diocese of Ogdensburg has three seminarians in formation at the Josephinum: Deacon Lukas Gruber who is in his final year of study before ordination; Dennis Ombongi, a first-year Theology seminarian; and Venes Laine, a third-year Pre-Theology seminarian.

Bishop Terry R. LaValley served for a number of years on the Josephinum’s Board of Trustees, as both a member and chair.

“This year we’ve been blessed with one of the largest entering classes in many years,” said Father Steven Beseau, Josephinum rector/president. “But it’s not just about numbers, it’s also about the quality of the men. The Josephinum has a very rigorous acceptance process; we don’t accept everyone who applies. These seminarians would not be here if they weren’t good men. They really are exceptional and we are very blessed to have them.”

The formation of the Josephinum’s 60 seminarians is guided by ten full-time resident priest formators who themselves reflect the national character of the seminary, coming from the (arch)dioceses of Kansas City, Metuchen, Savannah, Chicago, Columbus, and Plymouth (England), as well as Institute of the Incarnate Word, the Dominican Order, and the Fathers of Mercy. Many full and part-time lay professors make possible an academic excellence for which the Josephinum has long been known.

“We have some of the finest professors in the country,” said Father Beseau. “This is seen not only in the classroom but also in the love and dedication they offer to the seminarians.”

Priestly formation consists of four dimensions—human, spiritual, intellectual and pastoral—the integration of which is reflected in seminary life. The Liturgy of the Hours, Mass, Holy Hours, academic classes, opportunities for the Sacrament of Reconciliation and Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament, off-campus pastoral formation assignments, formation conferences, one-on-one meetings with advisors and spiritual directors, and many recreational activities are all part of the seminary experience.

“Our seminary community is alive and growing,” said Deacon Gruber. “I’m grateful for my brother seminarians, who have answered the Lord’s call to enter the harvest field to discern a call to the priesthood. I know I am not the only one who is inspired and filled with hope when I see how faithfully they have responded to the Lord’s call.”

Seminary administrators are preparing to guide the institution into the future as it adopts a new comprehensive five-year Strategic Plan, currently under final review by the Board of Trustees.

Planning acknowledges the rising cost of seminary formation, reflected in the Josephinum’s highest-ever annual fundraising goal of more than $1.8 million.

“Funds are needed primarily for seminarian scholarships, to give seminarians the opportunity to discern and be formed,” said Father Beseau, “so that, if called to the priesthood, they are ready to respond as holy, generous, adaptable, and resilient priests.”

Appeal gifts also will fund program adjustments required of all seminaries by the new edition of the USCCB’s Program of Priestly Formation.

Independent of any one diocese or religious community, the Josephinum has a 134-year history of being sustained by the generosity of benefactors.

“The historic support of the Josephinum is remarkable,” said Father Beseau. “Helping to form future priests is an incredibly unique and deeply rewarding experience. It is a privilege to have so many people share in this journey.”

TOGETHER IN FAITH

Bishop’s Fund helps office coordinate Masses

By Father Bryan Stitt
Director, Office of Worship

“What a beautiful Mass!” These words are music to every priest’s ears, and the Worship Office of the Diocese of Ogdensburg helps make them heard more frequently.

As we look forward to 2023, we’re already planning another round of confirmations, a priestly ordination, and even a Mass for the Consecration of a woman to a life of virginity.

In my role as the Director of Worship, I get to assist our chief-liturgist, Bishop Terry R. LaValley, as he sanctifies the North Country and shares the Beauty of Christ’s life with the people of God.

Were you able to be with us in August for the 150th Anniversary Mass at the cathedral? What about the diaconate ordination of Deacon Lukas Gruber in Potsdam the month before? What about the Blue Mass in Clayton the month after? The list of beautiful celebrations never ends.

As we look forward to 2023, we’re already planning another round of confirmations, a priestly ordination, and even a Mass for the Consecration of a woman to a life of virginity.

All these events are overseen by the Worship Office, and all the components – the programs, flowers and music, not to mention all the run-of-the-mill expenses like incense, candles, hosts, wine, electricity and heat – must be paid for.

Beautiful diocesan liturgies come at a cost. That’s where your support of the Bishop’s Fund Appeal is invaluable. Donations to the Bishops Fund support the budget of the Worship Office, and the Worship Office helps you experience beautiful Masses.

Could I give you one more example of an unseen offering that your donations have supported?

In the middle of the pandemic, Bishop LaValley was looking for a way to stay visibly connected with his priests and to support them with in growing in their appreciation for the Mass. The Worship Office was able to bring create a custom program for our diocese with Chris Carstens of the Liturgical Institute.

“Rediscovering the Beauty of the Mass” gave us a chance to meet and grow together (albeit virtually) in the worst days of the pandemic. See for yourself at rcdony.org/eucharistiniitiative.

Thanks as always for supporting beauty in the Liturgy by supporting this year’s Bishop’s Fund Appeal.

For the birds

Climate change has its effect on not only the environment but also our bird population. These changes disrupt the “normal” patterns of weather, which has a profound effect on our birds. As a photographer, I have observed and photographed birds in different areas and seasons. The patterns were pretty consistent, including their migration, feeding and nesting habits. Over the past 5 years, I have noticed gradual changes. Different species are coming to the feeders, and other species have been missing. Some birds are coming earlier and staying later or not leaving at all.

Doing research, I discovered a wealth of information. I encourage you to add to the research.

A way to record birds’ behaviors is through banding. Manomet’s banding lab – one of the oldest banding labs in North America in Plymouth, Massachusetts — helps contribute to studies tracking changes in bird numbers and distribution in North America. Those studies show that over a quarter of birds found in the U.S. and Canada have vanished in the last 50 years.

From Audubon.org, I found these scientific terms related to birds:
1) Drought: Drought destroys water and food resources for many species.
2) False Spring: False springs (unseasonably warm, mid-winter days) “trick” plants into flowering early.
3) Urbanization: Cities demolish bird habitat and are often located in the places birds need.
4) Spring Heat Waves: Spring heat waves endanger young birds in the nest.
5) Lake levels Rise: Rising lake levels flood coastal habitat important to nesting birds.

If you are a birder or just enjoy observing birds, be aware of the species you are seeing and not seeing and let your local birding organization know.

It is very important to keep track of what is happening to our birds. We can be a part of the solution.

Catholic Campaign for Human Development

For more than 50 years, the Catholic Campaign for Human Development (CCHD) has supported organizations that combat poverty and improve the lives of people in communities across the United States. From empowering immigrants in towns along the southern border to advocating for improved housing and educational opportunities in northern and midwestern cities, CCHD-funded groups tackle a wide range of economic and social justice challenges that affect local communities in rural and urban areas.

In areas of Tennessee where coal-mining operations and landfills have caused water pollution and other environmental damage, Statewide Organizing for Community EEmpowerment (SOCHEM) works with governments and regulatory agencies to limit hazardous waste disposal in landfills and to require environmental cleanup as part of the permitting process for new business operations.

Environmental damage affects all of us, most especially low-income people who are affected by water pollution resulting from mineral extraction, lack of access to healthy foods in urban “food deserts,” and natural disasters caused by climate change. The Church teaches that “the natural environment is a collective good, the patrimony of all humanity and the responsibility of everyone” (Pope Francis, Laudato Si’, no. 95). Since the release of Laudato Si’ in 2015, CCHD has invested more than $43 million in organizations that work to protect the environment and combat pollution. When you support CCHD, you support organizations that work to protect the air, soil, and water for all the members of their communities.

2021-2022 ANNUAL REPORT
Passing Our Living Faith to Future Generations

Dear Sisters and Brothers in Christ:

St. John Paul II said, “the future starts today, not tomorrow.” Every day presents an opportunity for you and me to pave the way for a better future. Our Pope and leader of the Catholic Church from 1978 until his death in 2005 taught that if we appreciated the mindset that the future starts now, we can live each day with new motivation to make life the best it can be for ourselves, the people around us and for our loved ones in the future.

Here, in the Diocese of Ogdensburg, we, too, have adopted this belief. In 2007, to “Build a Bridge for the Future” and continue a strong sense of commitment and attentiveness to meet the needs of tomorrow for our Catholic Community, the Foundation of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Ogdensburg was established.

We look to provide for the future needs of our parishes, schools, ministries, and Missionary Projects. The Foundation plays a pivotal role in supporting the financial, charitable, spiritual, educational, and temporal works of the Catholic family here in the North Country in the years ahead.

Our Foundation is in its fifteenth year of existence. Since its establishment, fifty-four Endowments have been created. They are listed on the back page of our insert along with their beneficiaries. Please take a moment to review these as well as our mission statement, what a Catholic Foundation truly is and how it works along with methods of giving.

I am extremely grateful to those who have had the generous foresight in contributing to the Foundation to benefit the future work of the Church. These gifts are a perpetual source of revenue for the parishes, schools, Nursing Home, ministries, and Missionary Projects of the Diocese as well as for the Education of Seminarians and Special Care of Priests.

As I am pleased to present to you this 2021 Annual Report, I would like to express my gratitude to Scott Lalone, Executive Director and to the Board of Directors for their willingness to serve, provide proper financial oversight, ensure legal ethical integrity, and offer effective organizational planning for the Foundation.

Wishing God’s blessing to you and your loved ones, I am

Gratefully yours in Christ,

Most Reverend Terry R. LaValley
Bishop of Ogdensburg

Catholic leaders vow to continue fight after state abortion measures pass

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Although Catholic leaders and state Catholic conferences had pushed for the defeat of ballot measures protecting legal abortion and urged voters to pass measures restricting abortions, state voters ultimately went the other way Nov. 8.

Voters in California, Vermont and Michigan approved abortion protections, while Kentucky and Montana voters rejected abortion restrictions.

These ballot measures were the first time voters faced the opportunity to weigh in on abortion laws since the Supreme Court’s Dobbs decision in June that overturned Roe v. Wade, its 1973 case legalizing abortion nationwide.

Catholic bishops in states where these votes took place expressed disappointment and renewed their commitment to keep up the fight to end abortion and to provide support to women and families in need.

"Abortion is now legal in Michigan at an unprecedented level, and millions of lives are at stake," wrote Detroit Archbishop Allen H. Vigneron in a letter to Catholics posted on the archdiocesan website Nov. 9.

"We awake today to the news that Proposal 3 has passed, altering our state constitution to allow for unregulated and unsafe abortion on demand in California, Vermont and otherwise worked against this proposal," the bishops wrote, pleading with Catholics to vote against it.

The California Catholic Conference had similarly urged Catholics to vote against that state’s abortion measure called Proposition 1.

On its website, the Catholic conference—which is the public policy arm of the state’s bishops—said the measure "would enshrine the explicit right to abortion in our state constitution, setting a nationwide precedent. It is the most egregious expansion of abortion this country has ever seen."

It also said the measure was the first time in California when "voters are being asked to vote for unrestricted late-term abortion, ending any real chance for California to protect unborn life in future laws."

In Vermont, voters passed Article 22, also called the Reproductive Liberty Amendment, to protect "personal reproductive autonomy" for people of any age.

The measure came to the state’s voters after state legislators passed a law in 2019 guaranteeing "reproductive rights." After the Dobbs decision, the measure’s supporters said the constitutional amendment was needed to provide more protections for abortion.

In September, Bishop Christopher J. Coyne of Burlington, Vermont, wrote to Catholics in the state urging them to vote against the abortion measure and instead to promote laws and policies that "directly confront the reasons why people choose to have an abortion."

Book envisions Austen as modern life coach

By Nancy L. Roberts
Catholic News Service

If you’re surprised by the idea of Jane Austen as a life coach, don’t be. After all, the Jane Austen Society of North America has at least 81 regional groups devoted to the writer that host regular book discussions, workshops and celebrations of her birthday.

The timelessness of works such as "Pride and Prejudice," "Sense and Sensibility" and "Emma" speaks to their author's deep understanding of human vulnerabilities.

Now Haley Stewart, a Catholic writer and podcaster, unpacks the practical and spiritual wisdom that Austen offers in her six novels. Lively and informative, "Jane Austen's Genius Guide to Life" gives a uniquely Catholic perspective on the British writer's exploration of human relationships.

For example, Stewart writes that the character Emma Woodhouse "fails to recognize either the shortcomings of those who flatter her or the potential of friends who might challenge her to improve. She judges others not according to their merits but according to how much they admire and agree with her."

This self-centeredness leads Emma to reject friendship with Jane Fairfax, a "beautiful and accomplished" orphan, for fear that the woman might "outshine her."

The takeaway from Emma's story is that we should strive not to let jealousy and vanity stop us from reaching out to others. As Stewart observes, "Humility is always the turning point in our journey toward virtue."

In "Mansfield Park," Austen deals squarely with the conflict between reality and appearance. An attractive exterior may not necessarily be good -- and it may not match the character of the interior.

In this novel, Edmund Bertram finds himself unable to resist the charms of a beautiful married woman, and, after hesitating, this leads him to participate in a little home play with her that also involves other young men as well as his young sisters.

This happens while his father is away and it has the potential to create a scandal, because it was then considered unseemly for young women to have such close, unsupervised contact with young men they hardly knew.

Because Edmund "is bamboozled by charm -- he does not have the moral strength and courage to stay committed to the right course of action under pressure from others."

But the quiet Fanny Price, whom Stewart describes as the story's "moral compass," declines to participate, "showing the importance of the virtue of constancy."

As Stewart observes, each of Austen's novels wittily examines common human vices -- and their antidote virtues. Thus "Pride and Prejudice" explores "the consequences of intemperance (Lydia and Wickham), folly (Mr. Bennet and Mrs. Bennet) and selfishness (Caroline Bingley)."

The cure for pride, according to Austen, is humility.

Another lesson from Austen the life coach teaches the importance of prudence. For instance, Mrs. Jennings in "Sense and Sensibility" means well but doesn't recognize that others might be more sensitive than she is to teasing behavior.

And the "lack of a moral imagination" by Catherine of "Northanger Abbey" prevents her from seeing that others may be far more "false, manipulative or conniving" than her own good character allows her to imagine.

Stewart rightly recommends reading "Persuasion," the last and most mature of Austen's finished novels, last. Here you'll encounter the beloved character Anne Elliott, who models the virtue of fortitude.

Life's slights could have made her angry and bitter, but she chooses to endure her disappointments with grace. She remains open and compassionate toward others, with a strong sense of self.

Stewart likens Anne's courage to that of early Christian martyrs. While she is "not at risk of execution in the Colosseum by wild beasts," nevertheless Anne is "afflicted in every way, but not constrained; perplexed, but not driven to despair; persecuted, but not abandoned; struck down, but not destroyed" (2 Cor 4:8-9).

This little gem of a book is thoroughly engaging with wide appeal, including to those who have never even cracked a Jane Austen novel.

An appendix gives pithy plot and character summaries for each of the novels. Another appendix briefly reviews the many film adaptations that have been inspired by Austen's books. There are also suggestions for further reading and extensive footnotes.

For each chapter, an appendix includes several useful group discussion questions. These reflect Stewart's wide-ranging background and include thoughtful references and comparisons with Flannery O'Connor, St. Thérèse of Lisieux and others.

SCROLL REFLECTIONS

Considering the end time

Our readings today are all about the end of time. Malachi speaks of the end-time as a “blazing oven.” Evil doers will be set on fire, while the sun of justice will cause the just to rise to glory.

In 2nd Thessalonians, only those who persevere in good works and eat quietly will experience a merciful judgement.

Father and I were processing to the opening hymn at the start of Mass one day many moons ago when he interrupted his enthusiastic singing by throwing a question in my direction. “Do you want to preach today?” I was ordained a deacon a little over a year prior to this event. Bishop LaValley had granted me the faculty – that’s what permission is called – to preach at the Sunday liturgy only a month or so before. “Do you want to preach today?” Little beads of sweat started to form on the back of my neck. A panic attack was imminent. All my spiritual preparation for the celebration of the Word and Eucharist was replaced by immediate fear.

In the time it took to sing two more measures, my mind was racing to remember the readings and fashion some sort of message of hope for this congregation that expected and deserved more than I was going to be able to conjure. “Do you want to preach today?” I had not answered yet. Our procession was half-way to the sanctuary. Three years of preparation to preach had taken place in formation for the diaconate. My instructor had repeated over and over that a good homily was the fruit of prayer, study and the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Every homily required time to choose the right message, fashion the text and review it over and over.

Do you want to preach today?

Several months of “practice preaching” in other locations occurred before I was deemed ready to preach to my home parish congregation. Each new homily had been submitted to my priest mentor in advance of delivery. Every homily I preached during this pre-season period was critiqued by people in the various congregations. My priest mentor and my pastor had to tell our bishop in writing that I was ready. He considered their recommendations and, if necessary, chatted with other people before deciding whether to grant the faculty or not.

The bottom line is that a really good homily takes time to prepare, reading and re-reading the scripture texts, silent prayer and inspiration. Coming from the pastor, the question was more like a statement. “Do you want to preach today?” really meant “You will preach today.”

“Sure,” I whispered between words of the opening song. Father nodded. We bowed at the entrance to the sanctuary. I was operating purely by memory because my mind was considering, rejecting, accepting and formatting the homily I would preach in ten minutes.

Then, as the celebrant and I kissed the altar, I spotted the little smile he always adds to a “gotcha.” It is my friend’s tell.

We reached the chairs and bent over to pick-up our hymnals for the final verse of the processional hymn. We faced each other. Father winked and said, “On second thought, I’ll preach.” Relief. But I was a little disappointed. In that minute or two I had come up with a pretty good idea, I thought. Father’s homily, as usual, was way better.

Deacon Kevin Mastellon ministers in Watertown. He is the Director of Permanent Deacons for the Diocese of Ogdensburg.
Missionary sister, now free, awes with courage

The following is an unsigned editorial published on the website of Catholic New York, the newspaper of the Archdiocese of New York. It is printed here courtesy of Catholic News Service.

It takes a special kind of person to become a missionary, to leave the familiarity and comforts of home to serve others in far-off developing lands where, at best, you may not be welcome or, at worst, may be targeted by rebel groups or gangs.

Marianite Sister Suellen Tennyson, an 83-year-old native of New Orleans, is one such special person, and we’re in awe of her courage and strength.

Sister Suellen was based for nearly 10 years at a medical mission in the country where security has markedly deteriorated in recent years with armed gangs causing fear and havoc.

Despite that, the nun remained at her post until last April, when she was abducted by a group of armed Muslim men who pulled her from her bed, blindfolded and gagged her and held her for five months in a forest deep in West Africa.

She did not know where she was nor why she was taken, nor does she know why she was suddenly released in neighboring Niger to the custody of the FBI and American diplomatic personnel.

“I had many conversations with God” during captivity, she said. “Prayer sustained me.”

Aside from the loss of her freedom and the stress of loneliness and isolation, she was not tortured or overtly mistreated by her captors. In one instance, in fact, one of the men noticed she had a cut on her toe and surprisingly began washing her foot.

“I’m sitting there, and this Muslim man is washing my feet. And I said, ‘God, is something going on here?” It was like God was using him in some kind of way. I was just taken aback,” Sister Suellen said in a Sept. 13 interview with the Clarion Herald, newspaper of the Archdiocese of New Orleans, and picked up by Catholic News Service.

It is not clear whether Sister Suellen was targeted because she is an American or because she is a churchwoman.

Certainly, Christian clergy and other church personnel – including local clergy – have suffered in places plagued by civil unrest.

In Cameroon, for instance, a predominantly Christian country in West Africa, the church is a frequent target. Priests, bishops and seminarians have been kidnapped and released and a church was set ablaze last week in a separatist war that’s been raging since 2016.

One of those kidnapped and released, Bishop Michael Bibi of Buea, told CNS that the church will continue to do God’s work, despite the challenges. The priests, he said, “will never abandon the people of Christ.”

Sister Suellen, speaking from New Orleans where she returned quietly Aug. 31, expressed gratitude that her life was spared and for the invisible actions of the uncoun ted people who prayed and worked for her release.

“That’s what I want to say, ‘Thank you to all these people,’” she said. “I am truly humbled by all of this. And the only way I can say thank you is ‘thank you.’”

A beautiful sentiment, but we are the ones who are humbled. And we are the ones who say, again, we’re awed by her courage and strength – and the humility and dedication we’ve seen in so many missionaries over the years.

They’re the ones giving witness to Christ. They’re the ones who deserve our thanks.

COLORFUL FOR A CAUSE

On Saturday, October 15, St. Agnes School in Lake Placid held a Color Fun Run, a fundraiser for the Missionary Childhood Association. In a color run, volunteers toss a powdered color on participants at various spots throughout the run course.

BUILDING Our Mission to the Missions

The Black and Indian Mission Collection (BIMC) exists to help diocesan communities to build up the Church and preach the Gospel of Jesus among the African American, Native American, and Alaska Native people of God.

Every year, it is the amazing generosity of Catholic faithful, just like you, who enable the Black and Indian Mission Office to support the following important priorities:

Enlivening Parish Life & Catechesis

Grant funds from the BIMC support parish-based catechetical programs, which form and train catechists who form children to be disciples of Jesus in the world and who put bibles and catechisms in kids' hands so they can learn the ways of the Lord and take their place around his altar.

Empowering Evangelizers

BIMC grant funds support African American and Native American ministries to sponsor events and formation that encourage living the Christian life in culturally appropriate ways. The religious sisters shown here, serve Native American Catholic communities across the United States.

Helping Educators Reach Kids

With your contribution to the BIMC, you will help support the placement of good teachers to educate African American and Native American children. In 2021, your generous donation reached over 5,000 students in more than 400 schools and parishes across the United States.

Encouraging Vocations

The church needs men and women to answer the call to the consecrated life and offer their witness as radical disciples of Jesus Christ. We need priests in order to have the Eucharist! Supporting the BIMC enables us to help encourage vocations to the priesthood and religious life in African American and Native American communities across the country.
