No North Country Catholic next week

To allow North Country Catholic staff and contributors an opportunity to celebrate Christmas, there will be no North Country Catholic the week of December 28.

The next edition will publish the week of January 4.

The North Country Catholic – staff, reporters, columnists and photographers – wishes you a merry and blessed Christmas and a happy New Year.

Merry Christmas!

Pope to kids: Put down phone, look to God and look at others

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – Pope Francis encouraged youngsters to put down their phones to spend time praying and looking at other people to see their needs.

"The Lord does not want us to spend our days being closed in on ourselves. And this is a great risk for boys and girls today: to spend the day staring at the screen of a cellphone," he wrote in a prepared speech.

"Our eyes are made to look into other people's eyes," he said. "They are not made to look down on a virtual world we hold in our hands, but to look up to heaven, to God, and to look into the eyes of those who live near us."

The pope's written remarks were distributed to members of the boys' and girls' section of Italian Catholic Action, a parish-based program of faith building and social outreach, during an audience at the Vatican Dec. 15.

"Some might think that being a good Christian requires, most of all, reflection, meditation," the pope's text said. "Instead, Jesus says: Go! It is a decisive verb, because it transforms the disciple into an apostle, makes him or her a missionary."

"You, too, dear friends, are called to go, because God does not like it when we get lazy on the couch; he wants us on the move, on the road, ready and willing to get involved," he wrote.

Setting off may be a little scary, he said, but it is worth it.

"It is beautiful to follow Jesus," he wrote. "It is beautiful to discover the great love that he has for each of us; it is beautiful to venture into the project of happiness that he has in mind for me, for you, for everyone; it is beautiful to discover the gifts that he gives us with great generosity, the surprises that fill our lives with wonder and hope, that make us grow free and happy."
I can’t answer that question

I don’t have an answer to the question. You know the one. It comes up this time of year with family and close friends. “What do you want for Christmas?” I can’t think of a single thing I want or need.

As I racked my brain on countless occasions trying to come up with stuff to add to my list, it occurred to me that the difficulty of the task proved something I already knew: I have gifts all around me, all the gifts a person could ever need! I have the love of my amazing family and friends, including my two awesome men (my husband and son). I have a warm home. I have food in my refrigerator and pantry. I have a closet full of clothes. I have lots and lots of stuff.

As they say in the multitude of infomercials and product promotions we see this tie of year, “but wait! There’s more!” I have a career I love and find fulfilling. Because of and through that career, I’ve been given even more gifts.

It’s a gift to work with the North Country Catholic’s reporters, columnists and photographers and the diocesan staff. These are people who love the Lord and love sharing Him and His works with others. They’ve shared the Lord with me.

But wait! There’s more! It’s a gift to work with the faithful of the North Country. I’m blessed that you share your faith, your kind words and even your constructive criticism with me.

It’s a gift to work for Bishop Terry R. LaValley and to help him share the Good News – both the Gospel and how we’re living it out here in the North Country.

But wait! There’s more.

It’s a gift to know that our God loves us so much, He sent his Son to live among us and to save us from sin and death. In fact, that’s the biggest and best gift of all. It’s the real reason we celebrate. It’s the reason I don’t have the answer to that question: I have been given everything I need.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year from all of us at the North Country Catholic. You, the NCC’s readers and supporters, remain in my prayers this season.

My favorite Christmas story

I would like to wish you all a Happy Christmas – you and your families will be remembered in my Christmas Masses. Also, I want to send my blessing to you all for a Happy New Year!

Today’s column will be my Christmas card to you. I want to thank you for being part of my family of readers. I am grateful for you all. I do want you to know that I think of you each week as I prepare to write for the paper. You are always in my prayers.

Today I want to share with you again my Advent and Christmas story. It was the most exciting day in my life and comes to mind for me every year at this Christmas time. I know you have heard the story before. I repeat it often. Please forgive me, but here we go again.

It was 25 years ago this year. Susan, my nephew Paul’s wife, had invited me to the birth of their second child as the time of the birth was approaching. At that time, I was pastor at St. Mary’s Parish in Ticonderoga. It was going to be a bit of a drive to get there, but I was ready.

I do remember the day. As I returned from a call to the house, my secretary, Diane, met me at the door and said, “You better get moving! Something is happening in Syracuse!” So, I did get moving. I was not going to miss this. I did arrive in plenty of time. They had not left for the hospital yet.

I learned a great deal that night. I was so thrilled with the wonder of God’s creation. I also realized that the mother is the one who is always in charge. So, after a while, Susan announced it was time, and we headed to St. Joseph’s Hospital. I remembered as they were checking in, I overheard one of the nurses saying, “My God, they have brought their priest.” I did let them know that I was a relative.

Then, as I remember, we took a walk down the hall, then Susan said, it was time. The nurses began to get things organized and the doctor arrived. I remember that one of the nurses came over to stand with me. She said she was there to explain everything to me. I think that she was there to make certain that I didn’t do anything out of order.

I do remember I was nervous. I am often asked what prayers I said during the birth. I must confess to you that I didn’t say any prayers at all. I was too absorbed with all that was happening. I did offer a prayer of gratitude after, and when I was allowed to hold this newborn infant, his name is Will, I offered a prayer of blessing.

I must tell you that one of the things I discovered was the pain of childbirth. I had certainly heard about it, but that night I realized what was meant by the pain of childbirth. Susan had to exert and work; there was truly pain. I must tell you that I was so impressed in that moment. I realized that my own mother had to suffer for me. My prayer is a prayer of gratitude. My mother loved me so much that she accepted that pain to bring me into this world.

I also want you to know how impressed I was with the love that was in that room – the love of a mother and the love of a father as he supported his wife as well as he could. The love that I could recognize in the care of that doctor and the nurses.

Then the baby was taken care of, and Susan was settled in a room. So, Paul and I headed on home. We did stop on the way for a cup of coffee in a diner. I do remember the conversation. It was filled with hopes and dreams and talk of how the family would change with a new addition.

So, that is my story. I have only told it a thousand times. I continue to thank God for that day and that experience. It was truly the most exciting day of my life. I remember well being so close to God, the Creator.
‘The Christmas story is our love story’

Dear Sisters and Brothers in Christ:

What is this sign that the angel in St. Luke’s Gospel proclaims? God is born among us. What a wondrous sign of God’s love for you and me! St. John of the Cross once wrote to a friend: “Think nothing else but that God ordains all, and where there is no love, put love, and you will draw out love.”

When God the Father didn’t find love in the human race, He put love in the human race through the Incarnation of His Son. Then, He found Love, in His Son Jesus and in all who had become a part of His Body. Each of us is called to go and do likewise. When we don’t find love in a situation, we can put love there and then we’ll find it. We can make a difference.

A current example can be found in the tens of thousands of Polish families opening their living rooms to Ukrainians fleeing their homeland. Polish monasteries, convents, rectories and homes are among some of the places where Ukrainian refugees are encountering the living Lord in their neighbors.

We must embrace the same kind of faith in the overriding providence of God in all the events of our lives — even in a world that, at times, seems so loveless, so Godless. The angel insists: Do not be afraid, I’ve got some great news to share with you. God has been born among us and, through His Spirit, He remains ever present.

Fear can be a crippling emotion that often raises our defenses and restricts our outreach to others. However, such a divine intervention as God’s birth on earth, prepares you and me to open ourselves to the gift of God’s presence. When we accept such an invitation in humility and with patience, we can grow in holiness. Fear subsides because we know we are in the presence of Jesus.

The Christmas story is our love story. It’s the story of our encounter with the living God and sharing the fruits of that encounter with others. It’s no wonder that this is a season of great hope, joy and peace. May the Christ Child bring you and your loved ones the Gift of Love, the Blessing of Hope and the Promise of Peace. A blessed Christmas and joy-filled New Year!

Faithfully yours in Christ,

Most Reverend Terry R. LaValley
Bishop of Ogdensburg

May the blessings of that first Christmas be yours this season and always.

Dear Sisters and Brothers in Christ:

A synodal Church is one that walks together. We are pilgrims on a journey but not as isolated, solitary travelers. United as the Body of Christ, we walk together, supporting, encouraging, sharing and discerning the voice of the Holy Spirit.

Pope Francis asked the Church to pray together, to hold conversations, to listen to one another and the Holy Spirit. In the Diocese of Ogdensburg, pastors attended regional gatherings with parish delegates to pray and share their answers to meaningful questions. Pastors and delegates were asked to bring the same process to their parishes, and then report the nature and content of those conversations.

In that same synodal process, the submitted reports and surveys were synthesized in our 10-page diocesan report. Our national report and those from around the world will be used by Church leadership during the formal Synod meetings planned for 2023 and 2024.

In the meantime, I pray our local conversations continue to bear fruit. I hope we apply our synodal synthesis to our diocesan goals. We are working to apply what we learned in these discussions to our diocesan mission, ministry and offices.

I invite you to read the report and pray to the Holy Spirit for guidance. Consider the themes that emerged from the conversations, as well as the Committee Observations. Do they strike a chord as we journey together as the Body of Christ? Do they highlight areas where you and your parish radiate the love of Christ or areas for improvement?

This report is the culmination of many, many hours of planning, prayer, discussion and reporting. My gratitude goes to all who participated. Whether at a Pastoral Council meeting or a catechesis discussion or around the dining room table, I pray we continue drawing closer to one another and to God, praying together, speaking about our faith, encouraging one another and building up our local Church by being Christ-led, Christ-fed and hope-filled.

Faithfully yours in Christ,

Most Reverend Terry R. LaValley
Bishop of Ogdensburg

For a Synodal Church: Introduction

INTRODUCTION

Background

In 2014, priorities and goals for the Diocese of Ogdensburg were prayerfully developed and announced after an extensive envisioning process facilitated by the Catholic Leadership Institute. The process included eleven listening sessions held around the Diocese by Bishop Terry LaValley. The priorities and goals developed continue to guide the diocesan mission and are intended to be living, continuously revisited and refreshed. Bishop LaValley views the Synod journey as an opportunity to discuss anew the diocesan goals and priorities while engaging in the wider synodal discussions and journey at the parish level, diocesan level and for the universal Church. The Synod also coincides with the Diocese of Ogdensburg’s 150th anniversary and is part of the celebration.

Rather than repeating the diocesan-level process used in 2014, Synodal conversations were held largely at the parish level. To that end, each pastor was asked to appoint a delegate for his parish or parish group. Pastors and delegates participated in one of three regional delegate training sessions, which were designed to explain and model synodal conversations. A three-phase approach was suggested. The three phases include reaching out to:

1. Existing ministry groups
2. “People in the pews”
3. Those outside or on the margins of the Church

Pastors and delegates were provided packets with resources to aid them in facilitating Synodal conversations. Delegates found limited success reaching out beyond the parish or to those on the margins of the Church. Recognizing there were parishes with little participation and a lack of response from the margins, the diocesan Synod Committee created and published an online survey with a paper option to collect individual responses and linked to them from our Anniversary page https://150.rcdony.org.

During our compilation of this report, the committee closely reviewed the My2Cents statistical reports. Reaching out through in this manner did not reach phase 3 people – those outside the Church or in the margins. In fact, 114 of 119 responses (96%) listed themselves as Catholic. Of the 113 responses to “How often do you attend Mass?”, 104 responded daily or weekly. The My2Cents survey succeeded in providing a platform for those unable to participate in synodal discussions for health or security reasons. However, it failed to reach those outside the Church.

Difficulties arose from the timing of the start of the Synodal process. Delays occurred due to the busy Advent season and parishioners leaving for warmer climates. COVID also hampered the gathering for synodal conversations. For those who were able to participate, delegate reports indicated many participants were surprised by how much they enjoyed the in-depth discussions about how we journey together as Church. The Diocesan Synod Committee and Bishop LaValley reviewed all feedback received from the parish conversations as well as individual responses such as from the My2Cents survey. Areas of consensus in the feedback received from the parish conversations are reflected in this report. The My2Cents feedback was used to supplement the synthesis, providing support or counter-voice in communion with the Holy Spirit.

Writing the Synthesis

This synthesis was composed in a synodal fashion. The diocesan Synod Committee reviewed the feedback as a group, asking, “how are we journeying together, what do we hear, what is the consensus, and where is consensus lacking?” The synthesis is intended to reflect what was shared without clarification or conclusions.

AND THE WORD BECAME FLESH AND DWELT AMONG US.
For a Synodal Church: Synthesis

CONSENSUS
Two major themes emerged from the responses: “Who are the people of God?” and “How are we journeying together?”

Who are the people of God?
The universal Church allows and encourages diversity including expressions of spirituality. Rather than divide us, our diversity should be a source of strength. A variety of discussions reflected the idea that input from diverse voices should be sought by Church leadership at all levels. Anxiety exists regarding the institutional Church and her leadership’s perceived lack of connection to the modern world.

There is strong consensus that people are hungry for relationship with each other and with their priests, especially sacramentally. The pastor’s attitude and presence set the tone for the parish and school. Joined or merged parishes need to see themselves as real, singular faith communities, journeying together and sharing resources. As parishes come together, mission and vision must override the tendency to compete.

Parishioners and visitors need to recognize the giftedness of the laity and encourage collaboration and co-responsibility for the mission of the Church. We promote collegiality by identifying and promoting the talents of others. The Church is seen as judgmental and rulebound; we need to reach out and journey with people on the margins.

Those coming to church out of obligation, visitors and parishioners not involved in ministry may not feel welcome. Some of the marginalized were identified as lapsed Catholics, transient, poor, those struggling with moral teachings, elderly, homebound, prisoners, women, divorced/separated, young, LGBTQ, those preferring the Extraordinary Form of the Mass, liberals, non-whites, special needs and broken families. Due to the abuse scandal, some rejected the Church, creating a new group on the margins.

There is a desire to better understand Church teaching regarding marginalized groups, especially LGBTQ. Many of the responses also indicated a desire to understand how to apply and live applicable Church teachings.

At the diocesan Youth Rally, “In HIS House”, on April 2, 2022, the Evangelization Office offered youth ages 12 to 18 a fifteen-question survey that breaks down into five categories. Students were asked to rank a statement’s validity on a scale of 1 (Not true at all) to 5 (Very true). A link to the survey used at the Youth Rally is available in the Appendix. The highest scoring category is Celebrating, where youth were asked about participating in religious celebrations and the meaning those celebrations.

How are we journeying together?
The diocese and parishes need to clarify their mission and vision statements. Many of those participating in the discussions recognize a lack of understanding of worship and sacramental life and would like to hear homilies that connect the Gospel and Church teaching to their lives.

Formation
In a number of discussions, the faithful expressed that many of their fellow parishioners have not encountered Christ in the Eucharist. There is concern some see Him or the Eucharist as unimportant, irrelevant and not present in their lives.

On the other side of the coin, conversations indicate the importance of articulating the tenets of the faith in a way that is accessible and understandable to the inadequately catechized.

There is strong consensus that parental involvement in catechesis is necessary and lacking. Some discussions also pointed out a need to balance catechesis with experiences of faith and a relationship with Christ.

The need for catechesis is not limited to children. Adults seek opportunities to learn the teachings of the Church, the rationale behind those teachings and how to apply Church teachings in their daily lives. People want to be taught to pray; they want their churches open and available for both personal and communal prayer. There is also a genuine desire for opportunities to participate in devotions.

There is strong consensus that the breakdown of the family has made passing on the faith more difficult and hinders all aspects of formation and vocational awareness. Participants in the Synod discussion broadly desire to engage youth and accompany them on their faith journey.

We need to promote church vocations.
Community
The theme of community appeared in the majority of comments. Community is described in many forms in the varied discussions.

There is consensus that community is created within parishes through shared experiences (outreach and service, events and intentional small groups). There is a longing for opportunities to be heard and for safe, non-judgmental dialogue.

Discussion participants desire additional faith formation, especially as it relates to the importance of the Eucharist, how to pray and how to apply Church teachings to lived experiences.

Respondents said the Church must go forth and convert the world and affect the culture rather than building a fortress to protect herself.

Outlier responses (submitted by one or two parishes/individuals) included comments calling for a greater role for women and recognition of same-sex unions.

SYNTHESIS - HOW ARE WE JOURNEYING TOGETHER?
• Community was the most common theme in submitted comments. Consensus recognizes that community is created within parishes through shared experiences (outreach and service, events and intentional small groups).
• There is a longing for opportunities to be heard and for safe, non-judgmental dialogue.
• The diocese and parishes need to clarify their mission and vision statements.
• Discussion participants desire additional faith formation, especially as it relates to the importance of the Eucharist, how to pray and how to apply Church teachings to lived experiences.
• Respondents said the Church must go forth and convert the world and affect the culture rather than building a fortress to protect herself.
• Outlier responses (submitted by one or two parishes/individuals) included comments calling for a greater role for women and recognition of same-sex unions.
For a Synodal Church: Outliers

Responses suggested communication to internal and external audiences needs to increase and improve, especially via digital means. This was supported when “The voice of the Church is heard in our society, denouncing injustice and announcing the message of Jesus” received the lowest average score and poorest distribution of scores on the Youth Rally Survey. The questions in this category, The Church and the World, received the lowest average score.

Outliers

Feedback received from parishes revealed consensus on the themes above, desire for community, hospitality, relationship, adult faith formation and faith sharing opportunities, and concern for youth. Other themes are mentioned in only one or two parishes and corroborated in the My2Cents survey feedback or repeated in the My2Cents feedback alone. Most of these themes qualify as being on the extremes of the theological spectrum. These comments are included to ensure the synthesis remains as synodal as possible, supporting a listening environment where individuals have the courage to speak and be heard.

Included in those comments is a call for a greater role for women in the Church, with some calling for women’s ordination to priesthood or diaconate. This is expressed by some as solution to the shortage of priests. In response to the lack of priestly vocations, there is a call for married priests.

Generally, there is a recognition that LGBTQ persons are marginalized. There are comments and questions about how to welcome members of this community while upholding Church teachings. However, there are voices that call for recognition of gay/same-sex marriage or blessings of same sex unions. At the same time, other voices counter that it is vital that the Church continues to promote and proclaim difficult teachings such as those related to life issues and homosexuality.

In some conversations and in the survey, especially with young adults, a hunger for the “rejuvenation of the Mass” rises to the top. There is a desire for reverence, quality music and homilies, prayer and a sense of welcoming. For many others, the desire for tradition is a pre-Vatican II mentality that is divisive and polarizing.

Especially in the My2Cents survey, respondents feel as though they marginalized and not part of the community. Many indicate they feel unwelcome in their parishes. Others opine that they are marginalized because they hold opinions on an extreme of the theological spectrum.

Although there were not many conversations with those who left the Church, whether they became non-affiliated or joined another denomination, there is a need to share the few such comments submitted. For some, there is a great sadness. Most speak about their experience of Church being uniformly and consisting of boring ritual. The Church is seen as judgmental, and participants feel rejected.

On the other hand, many respondents to the survey wrote beautiful stories of their journeys back to the faith or of conversions to the faith. These stories came as responses to a question about their experience of Church or faith.

Although theseouting themes did not rise to a level of diocesan consensus and communion, they speak to the greater theme of how we journey together. They speak to the themes of community, inclusion, and the need to overcome division and polarization. There is a need to be able to speak courageously and a need for all to listen.

Committee observations

The process of writing this report attempted to continue in the spirit of the Synod and included prayer, open discussion and seeking a communion of ideas. After hosting and participating in dozens of synod sessions and during the synthesizing of group discussions and responses collected, the Synod Committee developed observations and ideas derived from the Synod discussion but not stated.

The Synod provides a much-needed opportunity for dialogue among the people of the diocese. The overarching area of consensus is the need for community, including such themes as hospitality, inclusion, vocation. Even the theme of marginalization speaks of including and inviting those on the margins back into com-
CONCLUSIONS
These discussions and what we learned from them strengthen our resolve to revisit and refresh the Diocesan Priorities:

• Building Parishes with Living Stones – The people of God must be connected. As part of the Body of Christ, all should grow in relationship with Christ and one another through prayer, fellowship, faith sharing, hospitality, dialogue, inclusion and invitation.
• Strengthening Faith Formation in Family Life – The family is the critical transmitter of the faith. Parents should be engaged in catechesis.
• Creating a Culture of Vocations – Called to holiness by baptism, the entire community must support the family and call forth all vocations from our youth and others.

Let us continue this synodal process and, inspired by the Holy Spirit, grow in our abilities to listen to God and one another, speak the truth in love, travel together as pilgrims and invite all to join us on the journey.

CONCLUSIONS
The theme of outreach speaks to inclusion of the marginalized, but also speaks to how service and working with others on a common mission builds community and spiritual friendships. There is a deep sense of isolation and loneliness that existed before and became more prevalent with COVID.

Despite the predominance of the community theme, responses almost never make any connection between the Mass, the Eucharist and the community being sought. One quiet comment was, “There is a lack of understanding of worship and the sacramental life.” That lack of understanding extends to the teaching and structure of the Church. This misunderstanding appears occasionally in discussion groups and more frequently in private responses. The good news is many desire adult catechesis and formation on how to compassionately live the teaching of the Church. The bad news is many are shopping for a Church where they can pick and choose the personality, spirituality and teachings they value personally. A disconnect exists between an individual’s desires and being in communion with the people of their parish.

This consumer mentality is present in remarks about traditional and progressive Catholics. On a positive note, it primarily emerges from discussions that acknowledge a fear of division in the Church community. The consumer mentality questions the validity or desirability of the other side of the spectrum. It limits or extinguishes dialogue, any attempt to appreciate others’ perspectives and recognition of the value of other expressions of spirituality. Some of this stems from a lack of understanding of Church and Mass.

Many discussions regarding the lack of youth engagement in the parish disregard the need for parents to lead the family to Church and God. Similarly, many comments about vocations do not recognize that vocations come primarily from family life and a wider understanding of the daily realities of clerical and religious life. Zero comments were received about the lack of men, especially fathers, participating in sacramental life.

The biggest contributor to the health of a parish seems to be its pastor. It is difficult to replace a pastor’s presence. The dwindling number of priests and need for pastors to take on more parishes or worship sites presents enormous challenges.

Although it was helpful during COVID, people are mainly tired of online events and desire opportunities to gather, share and learn from one another.

CONCLUSIONS
Thanks are given to God for this opportunity to journey together, to the Holy Father for convening this Synod, and to all who participated in the Synod process and conversations. These efforts will help us continue to strive for Our Sacred Purpose: “Christ-led, Christ-fed, and hope-filled, the Diocese of Ogdensburg joyfully invites the people of the North Country to the journey of faith through the proclamation of the Gospel, the celebration of the Eucharist and the Sacraments, and the loving service of neighbor.”

Toward that goal, these discussions and what we learned from them strengthen our resolve to revisit and refresh our efforts as they relate to the Diocesan Priorities developed in 2014: Building Parishes with Living Stones, Strengthening Faith Formation in Family Life.
For a Synodal Church: Diocesan priorities and Creating a Culture of Vocations.

Building Parishes with Living Stones

To build strong parishes, the living stones, the people of God, must be connected, supporting and strengthening one another.

An overarching area of consensus in the Synod discussions was the need for community. As part of the Body of Christ, all should grow in relationship with Christ and so with one another through prayer, fellowship, faith sharing, dialogue, inclusion, and invitation.

Pastors are ordained to model Christ’s love and participate actively in their parish communities, setting the tone for their parishes.

There is need for continued and increased outreach to those on the margins. Continued dialogue within parishes and communities to increase empathy and understanding is a means to overcome polarization and division and marginalization.

Joined or merged parishes, especially, need to prioritize creating opportunities for community and collaboration.

As the Body of Christ, we should recognize and encourage the giftedness of the laity, involve diverse perspectives and voices in leadership and decision making, and encourage collaboration and co-responsibility.

Strengthening Faith Formation in Family Life

The domestic Church, the family, is the critical transmitter of the faith and is responsible for bringing children to a relationship with Christ and His Church.

Parents should be engaged in catechesis for their children and their own ongoing faith formation.

Additionally, there is a yearning among adult faithful to deepen their knowledge of the truth of the Gospels and Church teachings and how to live those truths in the world.

The faithful seek to know Christ through learning to pray and encountering Him the sacraments.

Creating a Culture of Vocations

All are called to holiness by virtue of their baptism. There is a need to ensure youth are taught and shown the importance of discernment and vocational awareness, whether to the dedicated single or married life, priesthood or consecrated life, which is a primary responsibility of the family.

The entire Church community, as the living stones, provides support, call and formation for all vocations.

Steps Going Forward

In light of this report, which is a snapshot in time, we, as members of the Body of Christ, need to envision anew our mission, goals and priorities. What steps do we take to actually build community and form leadership so as to build parishes with living stones? How do we encourage our people to engage in formation, continual life-long learning and deep conversations about their faith so that they can be confident to go out as missionary disciples and become courageous witnesses to the love of Christ in the world? How do we improve our communication, both internally and externally, to show the beauty, truth and goodness of God mediated through the Church so that all will be drawn in, and desire to come and see and experience the joy of following Christ?

May we continue this synodal process, as members of the Body of Christ, re-learn the art of listening to God and one another, and speaking the truth in love, and truly journeying on this pilgrimage together while inviting all to join us on the way.

We would like to take this opportunity to thank our contributors. Those whom graciously and generously donate financially, physically and spiritually to those in need.

Your contributions positively change North Country lives every day ... and every day matters.

A Blessed Christmas and New Year to you all!

Catholic Charities - Diocese of Ogdensburg
51 priests beneficiaries of retirement plan

The 40 retired priests of the diocese who currently receive pensions from the Priests’ Retirement Fund will be direct beneficiaries of the generosity of Catholics in the North Country who contribute to their parishes in the Christmas collection. Also, 11 priests age 70 and older who remain active in their ministry in the Diocese of Ogdensburg are receiving partial retirement benefits.

Your gift this year will help support not only priests currently receiving support from the Priests’ Retirement Fund but also benefits to be paid to future retirees.

This Christmas, parishes are asked to contribute 75% of the Christmas collection to the Plan, with the parish keeping the balance. Parishes may also take a second collection solely for its benefit as Christmas is on Sunday in 2022.

While your gift helps pay pensions to retired priests, it will also help the diocese make provisions for pensions for other priests as they retire in the future.

Actuarial studies are performed annually to assure the diocese is preparing for its future obligations to retired priests. The firm of Frank J. Walters and Associates has determined that adequate provisions are being made in 2022-23 to fund the Plan.

On July 1, 2022, an increase of $30 in the monthly benefit paid to retired priests of the diocese became effective.

It is the diocese’s goal to provide a pension increase when able to do so.

Estimated pension payments in this fiscal year amount to one million dollars. One hundred percent of the cost of health insurance for retired priests is also funded through the Plan, the budget in 2022-23 for this benefit is $270,000.

Retired priests of the diocese receive pensions from the Social Security system. Because priests’ income is typically modest, their Social Security pensions are not large and most rely heavily on pensions from the diocese for a good portion of their financial support.

The value of investments of the Priests’ Retirement Fund decreased over a one-year period from $11,356,662 on June 30, 2021 to $9,259,130 on June 30, 2022. The diocese’s Investment Advisory Committee, diocesan administration, and the investment portfolio’s investment managers closely monitor monies invested in support of the Plan.

The Priests’ Retirement Fund of the diocese is also assisted through extraordinary gifts. Information about gift opportunities to benefit the Priests’ Retirement Fund is available from the Diocese’s Executive Director of the Development Office, Scott Lalone. He can be reached in Ogdensburg at (315) 393-2920 or through e-mail to slalone@rcdony.org.

Your personal generosity to the Christmas collection in your parish will support all retired priests of the diocese and benefit longer term the diocesan and religious priests serving you today. Your priests, retired and active, will appreciate your support tremendously!

St. Francis & Christmas

When sitting in church this coming weekend, look carefully at the Nativity scene near the altar. Typically, around the manger there is a cow or ox, a donkey, sheep and a few shepherds. Jesus is also depicted as lying on a bed of dried plant matter with His parents close by. There is a star shining brightly overhead. When St. Francis of Assisi thought about this event, he focused on the fact that Our Lord chose to enter our world surrounded by nature and drew as His first visitors individuals that lived close to nature.

Upon taking a human form, God integrated ordinary earthly compounds to form a body, and ingested common substances from the surroundings to nourish and sustain His flesh and blood. All of creation contributed to His earthly being. Also, since the Creator forms all, every entity has the same heavenly Father which makes us all brothers and sisters in creation.

St. Francis loved Christmas because this was the day we also became brothers and sisters with Jesus. St. Francis believed that Christmas was the most important day of the year, and it should be promoted as such. He wanted everyone to realize that the light of Christ can shine not only through people but also through all of creation. He encouraged his followers to place candles on trees to spread the word that the light of Christ has come to the earth and can be seen through all of nature.

St. Francis’ celebration of Christmas not only incorporated lights on trees but also an image of the stable and those present for Our Lord’s birth. Initially, St. Francis incorporated live barnyard creatures and real people for his first Nativity scenes. Later, statues would be used as they are today.

St. Francis wanted his followers to sing on Christmas, ring bells and rejoice, because it represents the anniversary of when God joined us here on earth to share our hopes, dreams, pain and suffering. It is when a great light appeared for anyone who wishes to experience it.

The Faith & Ecology Group would like to wish everyone a very blessed Christmas!

Did I make the right choice as dad was dying?

Sometimes people will contact the National Catholic Bioethics Center (NCBC) wondering if the decisions they made on behalf of a dying family member were the right ones. The NCBC provides a free Ethics Consultation Service where individuals can ask questions and seek guidance about ethics and medical decisions.

Some who call are interested in reviewing the details of how a loved one died, along with the advice they were given by doctors, nurses, hospice workers, family members and friends. While their loved one may have died months or even years earlier, they may still be unsure or unsettled about the treatment decisions they made.

End of life situations are not easy to sort out. Important practical details and medical facts may no longer be available or may have been forgotten with the passage of time. Sometimes family members may have disagreed with each other or were feuding about how best to proceed, or may not have wanted to seek out expert advice or guidance, so the decisions they made might have been hasty or under duress.

A friend once spoke to me about a young man who had shared with her some details about his father’s death. He told her that as he looked back on it, he had doubts that he had made the right decisions as his dad became more debilitated. He felt he had failed his dad because of the limited kinds of care he ended up authorizing on his behalf. My friend sought to reassure him that he really shouldn’t be troubled about it, because she couldn’t imagine that he would have done anything but his best under the circumstances, and so his dad likely had received very good care.

When she recounted the story to me, I asked, “But how would you actually know that his dad received good care and that the son really did make the right choices? Objectively speaking, the son may be right that some of the decisions were poorly made or selfish or otherwise flawed.” I asked her whether her first inclination had been to try to soothe his feelings and emotions, rather than considering the specific medical and ethical concerns he was raising.

I continued and offered: Maybe he really does need to discuss the facts of the case as best he remembers them. Perhaps he might benefit from bringing some of his concerns to the Sacrament of Confession. Assuming his concerns have some basis, even while acknowledging the uncertainties in his own decision making, such a step would help him find needed healing. By turning to the infinite mercy of God, and “clearing the decks” with the Lord in this manner, he would be strengthened to move forward in a new way without continually having to look over his shoulder and wonder endlessly about whether he did right by his dad.

Finding a sense of peace and resolution in this way is important, and his father, now long deceased, would, we could presume, want to see that kind of healing for his son as well.

My friend was intrigued by my comments and acknowledged that her first inclination had been to try to palliate and calm the situation by mostly talking around the issues and concerns he had raised. On further reflection, she could see the value of dealing more directly with those concerns so he could find a real measure of closure.

Dying well, of course, is a profound grace, not only for the person who passes on, but for all who are left behind. To die well does not imply that we have to use every medical treatment that may be available. We are required only to use those medical treatments or procedures that are deemed reasonable or “ordinary.” In other words, we should avail ourselves of those treatments that offer us more benefits than burdens.

It can be challenging to find useful and reliable sources of information to assist us as we try to make informed decisions about complex health care situations that may arise as
Pope: World needs more diplomatic efforts

VATICAN CITY (CNS) -- The only way “to protect the dignity and human rights of all, to promote justice, reconciliation and dialogue for the sake of enduring peace and to care for our common home” is to strengthen diplomacy and collaboration among nations, Pope Francis said.

Welcoming new ambassadors to the Vatican from Belize, Bahamas, Thailand, Norway, Mongolia, Niger, Uganda and Sudan Dec. 15, the pope thanked the nations they represent for the many ways they contribute “to the common good not only of their citizens but of our entire human family.”

He encouraged them to increase such efforts saying, “your resourcefulness and talents are also gifts that can be placed at the service of the wider world, in both bilateral and multilateral contexts, for the betterment of humanity.”

“In this vital and collective task of striving to safeguard and advance the well-being of men and women everywhere, especially in these days marked by the continued problems associated with the global health crisis and by the entrenched violent conflicts around the world, the concerted action of the whole family of nations and the work of diplomacy are required more than ever,” the pope said.

“Indeed, it only is by striving to confront the problems facing humanity in an increasingly integrated and solidarity way that solutions may be found,” he said.

“If peace is to have a chance and the poor the prospect of a better future,” the pope said, “we are all called to show greater vigilance and respond to the call to be peacemakers in our time."

Other challenges the pope said are impacting fundamental human rights and require greater attention from the international community include: “the lack of universal access to drinking water, food or basic health care; the need for equitable access to education for those all too often excluded; as well as the opportunity for dignified work for all.”

Pope Francis said efforts must be made to ensure that all opportunities are open and accessible to those who are often marginalized, such as those who are sick, have disabilities, young people, “girls -- who are frequently given insufficient opportunities for realizing their potential -- and all those from impoverished backgrounds at risk of being left behind, forgotten or even deliberately excluded from fully participating in their communities.”

“It is my hope that in the exercise of your high duties, you will be able to seek, both here in Rome and elsewhere, fresh and creative ways of promoting solidarity and social friendship, particularly with the most vulnerable of our brothers and sisters,” he said.

Adovcates praise decision to commute inmates' sentences

WASHINGTON (CNS) -- Catholic and other opponents of the death penalty applauded Oregon Gov. Kate Brown’s decision to commute the sentences of the state’s 17 inmates on death row, changing their sentences to parole.

The decision, effective Dec. 14, was announced the previous day by the Democratic governor, who said she was using her executive clemency powers in this decision, stressing that she has “long believed that justice is not advanced by taking a life, and the state should not be in the business of executing people — even if a terrible crime placed them in prison.”

Archbishop Alexander K. Sample of Portland was pleased with the announcement and said his “prayer is that a recognition of the true value of human life will take deep root in the minds and hearts of all Oregonians.”

Jordan to develop tourist village next to Baptism Site

AMMAN, Jordan (CNS) -- Jordan began Christmas celebrations by unveiling a project that could attract 1 million pilgrims annually to the officially recognized site of Jesus’ baptism on the east bank of the Jordan River. An area adjacent to Bethany Beyond the Jordan, as mentioned in the New Testament, will be developed to allow Christian pilgrims and visitors to spend more quality time at the Baptism Site, as it is called, “to learn, appreciate and renew their journey of faith and spirituality.”

More than 25 years ago, excavations began on the east bank of the Jordan River and uncovered the Baptism Site. The site is full of the ruins of ancient Roman and Byzantine churches and chapels, a monastery, hermit caves and baptism pools, destroyed by earthquakes and the river’s flooding. Throughout the centuries, the area had commemorated the site of Jesus’ baptism by John the Baptist.

Now, modern-day visitors can spend only a couple of hours there due to a lack of accommodations and services. A $300 million six-phase building project to establish a biblical tourist village located adjacent to this UNESCO-designated World Heritage Site seeks to address that, while respecting the spiritual integrity of the holy site itself.

Russia: Vatican apologized for pope’s remarks about fighters

VATICAN CITY (CNS) -- The Vatican has had diplomatic contact with Russia regarding comments Pope Francis made about Russian minorities being responsible for the worst acts of cruelty in the country’s war on Ukraine. Maria Zakharova, spokeswoman for Russia’s foreign ministry, told reporters Dec. 15 that the Vatican had apologized and so Russia considered the matter closed.

The Russian news agency Tass reported: “We received a letter through diplomatic channels from the Vatican, which contains an official statement on behalf of Cardinal Secretary of State Pietro Parolin in connection with the pontiff's aforementioned statement,” Zakharova said, according to Tass.

The Vatican letter “says, in particular, the following: 'The Vatican Secretariat of State apologizes to the Russian side. The Holy See has the utmost respect for all peoples of Russia, their dignity, faith and culture, as well as for other countries and peoples of the world,'” Tass reported. Zakharova as saying.

Matteo Bruni, director of the Vatican press office, told reporters, “I can confirm there have been diplomatic contacts in that respect.” He did not add other details. In an interview in late November with America magazine, Pope Francis spoke of the “cruelty” of Russian troops in Ukraine.
MONTREAL (CNS) – The retired judge who has co-chaired the Montreal Archdiocese's committee to implement abuse procedures has resigned, saying serious problems remain in the application of "regulations, policies and procedures approved by the archbishop."

"I began my mandate as co-chair with real enthusiasm and the hope that I would be able to make important changes that would make the Catholic Church in Montreal an example of transparency and accountability to victims of abuse," Pepita G. Capriolo wrote in her resignation letter, dated Dec. 7 and published as an appendix to the Fifth Ombudsman's Report for the Archdiocese of Montreal. The ombudsman's report was submitted to Montreal Archbishop Christian Lépine the same day.

She said "the numerous difficulties highlighted in the ombudsman's last reports" led to her resignation.

Two years ago, Capriolo signed an incriminatory report on the handling of Father Brian Boucher's case by Montreal archdiocesan authorities and even Vatican officials. Her report included 31 recommendations to better the management of procedures and accountability in complaints concerning abuse. Capriolo co-chaired the implementation committee until her resignation.

"The main reason for my resignation is that I didn't want to appear to condone what was being done. As long as I thought I could play a positive role and that my advice served its purpose, I stayed. I fought," she said.

Recently, she said, she noticed "pressure exerted on the archbishop." She said people encouraged him "not to act," and "slow down" the pace of change, to "not do things as clearly, transparently and strongly" as he intends it.

She said it took six months for the implementation committee to write "procedures and protocols for the management of sex abuse complaints in the archdiocese and for the formation of all pastoral personnel." All of this had been agreed to by the archbishop, "including a policy for sanctioning those disregarding what is planned" in these decrees and documents. However, "these sanctions are not applied."

Capriolo stressed the solitude of Archbishop Lépine in all of this. "Up there, he's very much alone. There's an impermeable wall between the faithful and him."

She said people stop her in the streets, write her letters and comments, to thank her "for what we are doing. They tell me it gives hope to faithful Catholics to see someone who wants change."

"I think that if the archbishop could see through that impermeable wall and listen to the people, he would realize they support him," she said.

She explained the pressure as "clericalism resurfacing and a fear of transparency." Some church people say to her, "You have to understand, it's a cultural change." She said she recognizes such a change is necessary — but she will not accept "the slowness and dysfunctions."

Despite her resignation, Capriolo remains optimistic. "If the archbishop is able to do what he wants, he will succeed. And I'll tell you why: because he has the support of the people, the faithful. And if he needs me, I will always be ready to help him. But I can no longer endorse the system in place."

LVIV, Ukraine (CNS) – When the Rev. Hennady Mokhnenko, a pastor and bishop of the Pentecostal Church of God of Ukraine, wrote to Pope Francis, he never expected the pope to share his letter at the Vatican.

The pastor and chaplain from Mariupol, Ukraine, is the founder and head of the nation's largest rehabilitation center for children, and he runs a network of such centers for adults.

During the early days of the war, his center for troubled teens in Mariupol came under heavy fire, so he evacuated them and later managed to evacuate more than 1,200 Mariupol residents.

"I became aware of the vital role of Pope Francis in the exchange of prisoners and the returning of our Ukrainian defenders. And when I realized the great work that the pope is doing for Ukraine, I just wanted to thank the pontiff for supporting us," he told Catholic News Service in early December.

Rev. Mokhnenko said his friend Denis Kolyada, a graduate of the Ukrainian Catholic University, gave his letter to the pope.

"Two days later, which was very unexpected for me, Pope Francis quoted this letter in his speech." Pope Francis quoted the letter Nov. 2, during a memorial Mass for bishops and cardinals who had died in the previous year.

In his homily in St. Peter's Basilica, the pope said he had just received a letter from a Protestant chaplain at a children's home in Ukraine.

"Children orphaned by war, children who are alone, abandoned. And he said: 'This is my service: accompanying these discarded (children) because they have lost their parents; the cruel war has left them on their own.' This man does what Jesus asks of him: caring for the least in the tragedy. And when I read that letter, written with so much pain, I was moved, and I said, 'Lord, it is evident that you continue to inspire the true values of the kingdom.'" Later, the pastor said, Auxiliary Bishop Jan Sobilo of Kharkiv-Zaporizhzhia invited him to Zaporizhzhia.

"He and I are currently working on various front-line issues, and our base is here in Zaporizhzhia," the minister said.

Rev. Mokhnenko said Bishop Sobilo told him Pope Francis had instructed him to send aid to the front.

"We received many food items for people living on the front lines. Every day, under fire, my commanders get to the red zones, to the front. Besides food supplies, we received significant financial aid from the pope for my chaplaincy and Protestant team. It was very unexpected," said Rev. Mokhnenko.

"I could never have imagined that a provincial pastor somewhere on the Ukrainian front would receive such a reaction from the pontiff. I understand that not many Ukrainians have information about the pope's role in the exchange of prisoners, so I would advise them to be very careful with criticism, because this priest — the leader of the Catholic Church — is doing an important thing. If he doesn't understand something the way we do, that's normal, for it's all dialogue. It's communication. He hears the voice of Ukrainians when there is direct communication, which is very important."

CALLED TO SERVE

He rules the world with truth and grace

Joy to the world, the Lord is come
Let Earth receive her King
Let every heart prepare Him room
And Heaven and nature sing
And Heaven and nature sing
And Heaven, and Heaven, and nature sing

An online encyclopedia reports “Joy to the World” is an English Christmas carol written in 1719 by the English minister and hymnwriter Isaac Watts. The lyrics are an interpretation of Psalm 98 celebrating the birth of Jesus Christ.

Today, the carol is usually sung to an 1848 arrangement by the American composer Lowell Mason. Since the 20th century, "Joy to the World" has been the most-published Christmas hymn in North America. It contains fitting lyrics for our world today.

Joy to the Earth, the Savior reigns
Let all their songs employ
While fields and floods, rocks, hills and plains
Repeat the sounding joy

Pope Francis started his 2015 encyclical on care for our common home, earth, with words from St. Francis of Assisi, a deacon. “Laudato Si, mi signore…” The Pope continued, “Saint Francis of Assisi reminds us that our common home is like a sister with whom we share our life and a beautiful mother who opens her arms to embrace us. Praise be to you, my Lord, through our Sister, Mother Earth, who sustains and governs us, and who produces various fruit with colored flowers and herbs”.

Merry Christmas from the the deacon community, ordained men, their wives and widows.

“God of love, show us our place in this world as channels of your love.”

Deacon Kevin Mastellon ministers in Watertown. He is the Director of Permanent Deacons for the Diocese of Ogdensburg.

SCRIPTURE REFLECTIONS

Finding light in the darkness

So often in our current society, the day of Christmas finds us completely exhausted. This year, we must not let the hectic pace of Christmas shopping, decorations and parties spoil the great feast itself. At a particular time and place this week, we need to stop everything and take time to prepare our hearts spiritually. We need to focus on the Infant Jesus Himself. Just as the eighth century, B.C., was a time of great turmoil and darkness, so too does war and fiscal uncertainty cast a long shadow over our hearts and hopes. Isaiah's words to God's people of his day and to us from the first reading of the Mass for Midnight tell us: "the people who walked in darkness have seen a great light; upon those who dwelt in the land of gloom, a light has shone." And then the great news: "For a child is born to us, a son is given us; upon his shoulder dominion rests. They name him Wonder-Counselor, God-Hero, Father-Forever, Prince of Peace." That's God's Word!

Flipping to the Mass at Dawn we find words of great beauty in the responsorial psalm "A light will shine on us this day: the Lord is born for us." The Gospel for the Mass during the Day is one of the most beautiful pieces of poetry and theology in the Bible. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." It also speaks of the struggle God had to find a place of welcome in our darkness, a place He could call home. As Jesus looked around his manger bed, he must have known a little fear – it was all so different from the heaven He had just left. Everyone wants to be home for Christmas. For many of us, we know that we can't go home again. Our hearts go out to our servicemen and women in foreign lands this Christmas. The same is true for many older people whose spouses have died, and whose children now have families of their own. What can they do? They can make Christmas in their hearts. Home is where the heart is! Like Mary, we ourselves must spiritually give birth to the Son of God. Loneliness can give place to a spirit of joy when we let His presence light up our hearts. As Mary was the bridge between heaven and earth, the divine and the human, so we can share her experience.

The Christmas readings are the key. Pray them slowly. Take time to plant them in your heart. As the Gospel of John tells us, "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us."

Merry Christmas from Ecuador

Below is an update from the Lenity Project which serves in Quito, Ecuador. The Lenity Project is one of the organizations supported by our yearly Missionary Cooperative Appeal.

It’s been more than a year since we achieved a strong semblance of our family’s operational style here in our new Foundation.

This includes the noonday celebration of Mass. With Christmas coming I could share a holy happiness of more and more folks including adults and kids coming into the dining room for Mass with me making me proud of my attractive powerful short sermons and lively style.

That’s the way it was until the day I noticed the competition. Four-year-old Eider along with some of his recruits lined up in front of the altar and were leading the congregation singing the hymn with grandstand gestures indicating where the Holy Spirit was setting them on holy fire first downwards sparking their heads, chests, hips, knees, feet, and then upwards before coming down again.

I guess my cooperation with the holy hysteria was a bit halfhearted. Whatever; Eider who has a habit of looking back over his shoulder to check on my participation, stopped his own prancing to scorn me a correctional stare until I got moving.

This, of course, gave the whole congregation an excuse for an out loud laugh “in Church.”

And that ended my hopes that Santa would reward my Christmas season style show.

But I guess you’ll accept my Christmas wishes for your deep happiness even if it comes out of the shadows of Eider’s increasing liturgical glory.

— Father Halligan

From the desk of Madre Cindy:
Christmas is a time to think about all the gifts we have been given. Family and friends are on the top of the list. Our Family in Quito continues to grow.
We could not serve these families without your help.
We give thanks to each of you for helping us celebrate the mystery of Christmas year-round.

Merry Christmas and many Blessings for 2023. Maybe Eider will teach Father Halligan to do the floss next year!
