Pope: People must overcome challenges together

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – The time has come to live in a spirit of fraternity and build a culture of peace, sustainable development, tolerance, inclusion, mutual understanding and solidarity, Pope Francis said.

"Now is not a time for indifference: either we are brothers and sisters or everything falls apart," he said in a video message marking the International Day of Human Fraternity Feb. 4.

The international celebration is a U.N.-declared observation to promote interreligious dialogue and friendship on the anniversary of the document on human fraternity signed in Abu Dhabi in 2019 by Pope Francis and Sheikh Ahmad el-Tayeb, grand imam of Al-Azhar in Egypt.

"Fraternity is one of the fundamental and universal values that ought to undergird relationships between peoples, so that the suffering or disadvantaged do not feel excluded and forgotten but accepted and supported as part of the one human family. We are brothers and sisters," the pope said in Italian in his video message.

People must walk together, aware that, "while respecting our individual cultures and traditions, we are called to build fraternity as a bulwark against hatred, violence and injustice," he said.
Thankful for the ‘memories’

It's one of the first things I look at when I unlock my iPhone in the morning. One of the popular social media platforms includes a “memories” feature. Clicking on that portion of the app/website allows users to see every post they made and posts others made that included them on that particular date over the years since they started using the platform.

For example, my memories from Feb. 5 included a 2011 photo I posted of my son, Jake, playing in the snow; a post from that same year from a friend teasing me about how good I was going to look in a Green Bay Packers cheese head hat after losing a Super Bowl bet; and a 2017 post a college friend shared after she found a photo of our college powder puff football team (the photo was from around 2001).

That “memories” feature gives me an opportunity to reflect on where I’ve been. It shows me photos and videos from experiences and events big and small. It gives me little reminders of how far my son, Jake, has progressed since his early days being completely non-verbal and being diagnosed with autism. It gives me chances to see conversations with people who are no longer here with us.

Sometimes, seeing my posts from years past shows me how much I’ve grown and changed over the years. Those old posts remind me where I’ve been.

I thought about how much I value that feature as I reflected on the theme of our diocesan 150th anniversary celebration, “Remember, Renew, Rejoice.”

In a special way this year, we’re called to remember our history as a family of faith, including those who came before us. We’re called to renew our commitment to Christ, his Church and one another.

We’re called to rejoice in the gifts and blessings we continue to receive from God as we work to be His voice and hands here in the North Country.

It’s also a good time to “Remember, Renew, Rejoice” in our own lives. It’s a good time to remember the experiences, events and people God has placed in our lives and the ways He’s helped draw us unto Him through them. It’s a good time to renew our commitment to at least trying to choose God and His ways every day of our lives. It’s a good time to rejoice that we have a Savior and His Church guiding us to eternal lives.

Considering the ‘call narratives’

Today, I would like to share with you my homily for the Fifth Sunday in Ordinary Time. It’s based on the three Scripture readings read at that Mass. They are what we designate as “call narratives.” These readings describe God’s call of Isaiah, God’s call of St. Paul, God’s call of St. Peter. Each of their calls helps us understand our own all from God. These call narratives are very fundamental to the spread of our Catholic faith during the foundation of the Catholic Community.

In this Sunday’s first reading, Isaiah tells how God called him to announce the coming of the Messiah. This was nearly 800 years before the birth of Jesus. Isaiah speaks of a divine vision of the angelic choir. This vision disturbed Isaiah. He feels unworthy and anxious “to have seen the Lord of Lords.”

However, God recognizes something worthy in Isaiah, so God sends a seraphim to touch his lips with a burning ember from the heavenly altar and saying “your wickedness is removed, your sin purged.” In faith, we believe God continues to forgive. He forgives us now and frees us from our sins.

Isaiah tells us that God asks, “Whom shall I send? Who will go for us?” Isaiah is the one who is filled with courage and faith, and he speaks out, “Here I am, Lord.” In our time, each time you and I go to Mass, the Lord asks again, “Whom shall I send? Who will go for us?” Today, will there be anyone who will answer like Isaiah— “Here I am, send me?”

The second reading is from Paul’s First Letter to the Corinthians. St. Paul describes to us of his call from God. He reminds the Corinthians of his teaching. He shared with them what he had learned: that Christ died for our sins, he was buried, he was raised to new life on the third day. Christ appeared to many, and Paul tells us that Christ appeared to him. Yet, Paul humbly admits that he is the least of the apostles, not fit to be considered an apostle because he persecuted the Church.

However, Paul’s life was transformed by the grace of God. His grace has given him the power to minister to the Lord. The forgiving grace of God has given each one of us today to wisdom and power to make this world a better place. Have we, like Paul, followed the Lord’s lead and grace to bring the word of the Lord to this world.

Finally, the Gospel reading of this Mass is the story of the call of St. Peter. Jesus is teaching at the lake of Genesaret, and as he often did, he climbs aboard Peter’s boat and continues to teach the people who are on the shore. When he finishes, he shouts to Peter to go out into deep water and fish. Peter, the skilled fisherman, knows this is not a good time for fishing. He has worked all night and has come up empty. He certainly doubts Jesus’ wisdom, but he is loyal to the Lord, so he heads out.

As you remember, they catch a great number of fish. Somehow Jesus, though not a fisherman, figures things out. Peter is humbled. He says, “Depart from me, Lord, for I am a sinful man.” Peter believes that there is no place for him with Jesus’ community. However, Jesus knows that Peter has all the qualities that he expects in his apostles. Jesus supports and calls Peter. “Do not be afraid; from now on you will be catching men.”

Today, the Lord continues to surprise many of us, calling us to be his apostles, to be the wise and powerful disciples who will make our Church alive and strong. Jesus reaches out and calls us, Jesus lets us know that he truly needs us and wants us to be his apostles.
ODENSBURG – On February 16, 1872, Pope Pius IX separated what was then a sprawling Roman Catholic Diocese of Albany, and the Diocese of Ogdensburg – encompassing Clinton, Essex, Franklin, Hamilton, Jefferson, Lewis and St. Lawrence counties, as well as northern Herkimer County – was created.

The Diocese of Ogdensburg is opening its celebration of its 150th anniversary, themed “Remember, Renew, Rejoice,” with a Holy Hour – time for prayer with the Eucharist, the Real Presence of Jesus – on February 12 at 3 p.m. at St. Mary’s Cathedral, Ogdensburg. Parishes, organizations and faithful around the diocese are encouraged to join the celebration by hosting similar prayer services the week of February 16.

The capstone of the celebration will begin with Vespers, evening prayer, on August 9 and continue with an Anniversary Mass on August 10, the Feast of St. Lawrence, both at St. Mary’s Cathedral in Ogdensburg. Events are also planned throughout the year, including:

• An Octave of Service – eight days set aside for parishes, organizations and individuals to serve each other, their communities and the Church – from May 19 to 26.

• Celebrations highlighting the 70th anniversary of St. Mary’s Cathedral in Ogdensburg and the 50th anniversary of Camp Guggenheim, the diocesan youth camp in Saranac Lake.

• A website and “story map” devoted to collecting and sharing stories of historical significance of the diocese. That website can be found at 150.rc-dony.org.

“As we celebrate 150 years as the Church of the North Country, we remember those who came before us, sowing the seeds of faith and building the foundation upon which we stand now; we renew our commitment to Christ, the mission He gave the Church and to serving the lost, rejected and forgotten; and we rejoice in the many gifts and blessings which come from the Lord,” said Bishop Terry R. LaValley.

In conjunction with the 150th anniversary, the Diocese is participating in the “Synod on Synodality” called by Pope Francis to create opportunities for what Vatican documents describe as “listening and dialogue on the local level” with the goal of “humbly learning together how God is calling us to be as the Church in the third millennium.” Dialogue is being fostered at the diocesan and local parish and organization levels.

Additionally, as the diocese celebrates its anniversary, it is refocusing on the Eucharist, Jesus Christ present body and blood, soul and divinity in the form of bread and wine by offering faith formation opportunities.

The Diocese of Ogdensburg, covering an area of 12,036 square miles, was established by Pope Pius IX on February 16, 1872.

The diocese is comprised of 78 parishes and three mission parishes made up of 101 worship sites, 16 parochial orphanages, two high schools, eight elementary schools and one nursing home. Catholics are served by 49 active diocesan priests, nine priests belonging to religious institutions, and five priests belonging to other dioceses. At Fort Drum, two priests of the Archdiocese for Military Services serve as chaplains. The Diocese of Ogdensburg has 37 retired and disabled diocesan priests, many of whom continue to minister in various roles. The diocese is blessed with one transitional deacon, 96 permanent deacons, 66 religious sisters and 753 commissioned lay ministers.

What is a Foster Grandparent?

Foster Grandparents are role models, mentors, and friends to children with exceptional needs. The program provides a way for volunteers age 55 and over to stay active by serving children and youth in their communities. They are placed in a classroom setting with a child or children who are in need of emotional support, development of basic learning skills, companionship, encouragement, individual attention, and unhurried help. The program currently has 40 volunteers and serves more than 100 kids per year.

"Am I Qualified to be a Foster Grandparent?"

All you need to join is the ability to give the kind of comfort and love that sets a child on the path toward a successful future. If you’re 55 or older and want to share your experience and compassion, you have what it takes to be a Foster Grandparent.

You’ll also receive a small bi-weekly, non-taxable stipend that cannot be held against any current benefits you may already have as well as paid mileage for your travel. Additionally, you receive paid holidays, vacations, sick and personal leave.

Youth invited to gather, celebrate ‘In HIS house’

By Thomas Semeraro
Director, Office of Youth Ministry

The Office of Youth Ministry is excited to offer a day of celebration for young people living in the Diocese of Ogdensburg on April 2 with the 2022 Youth Rally.

This year’s theme, “In HIS House,” imbues a sense of home and belonging to God. The opening of doors and arms to everyone sets the tone for an upbeat and lively event with fun games, entertainment, great food, a wonderful resort location, dynamic presenters and a closing Mass offered by Bishop Terry R. LaValley.

The Youth Rally will be held on April 2 at the High Peaks Resort, 2384 Saranac Ave., Lake Placid. The event runs from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., with closing Mass at 5 p.m. in nearby, St. Agnes Church.

Youth in grades seven through 12 are invited to attend.

This year’s keynote speaker will be Michael Mette. Mette is a dynamic and energetic speaker with more than 15 years in youth ministry.

Mette’s presentations inspire and motivate people to live their Catholic identity in an authentic way through knowing, loving and serving God. Mette has presented to parishes, conducted retreats and performed at Catholic conferences across the United States.

Mette shares his wisdom and his love of the Catholic Faith in a way that inspires young hearts and minds.

The Youth Rally will include a concert by the nationally known Catholic family band MJM7. MJM7 is made up of Mette and his children.

The Mettes’ gifts of music, joy and family life offer the boldness and innocence of youth with the wisdom and depth of lived experiences. MJM7 concerts fall somewhere between a rock concert and a parish mission, with vibrant lights, powerful music, faith sharing and an invitation to prayer.

The music is uplifting without being preachy, creating an environment that is engaging without being confrontational.

MJM7 have performed for thousands of young people from parishes to conferences and World Youth Day.

Youth at the Rally will also be encouraged to visit vendor booths, compete in special events and win prizes. They can visit the contemplative chapel for some quiet prayer or meditation, and they can have some art and craft fun at the creation station.

There will also be a photo station to create unique souvenirs to remember the event.

In addition to all the great things to see and do, a tasty buffet lunch will be provided by the High Peaks Resort culinary specialists.

Youth from around the diocese are encouraged to attend and bring a friend or a few friends. As Christians, we are called to invite all people to the Lord’s house and to the Lord Himself. It’s “In HIS house,” that all are welcome!

This is an all-inclusive event and is made available at the low price of $35 per youth thanks to the generous support of the Bishop Fund Appeal and donor organizations. Registration is required.

To register please visit rcdony.org/youth/rally.

For more information, contact the Youth Office at 315-393-2920 or email Jeannie Grizzuto at jgrizzuto@rcdony.org or Tom Semeraro at tsemeraro@rcony.org.

Wells – Big things often come in small packages. And sometimes deliberately small things come in small packages, too. This past year, I was blessed with obtaining one of my dream cars, an original Fiat 500. Being nine feet long and weighing just over 1,000 pounds, the small packaging is the point of the vehicle, known the world over for its profound ability to do everything a “real car” can do but in almost half the size.

Old cars hold many surprises, and this one has brought more than a few. But the most unexpected surprise has been its ability to bring me closer to my two-year-old nephew, KAL, and to be reminded again of what it means to be childlike.

Designed in Torino, Italy, in the mid-1950s, Fiat set out to build a very inexpensive, supremely practical car to get the Italian people moving again after WWII. With very limited resources in a nation decimated by war, this unique car came out of the imagination of Dante Giacosa, a brilliant engineer who solved this practical problem by creating one of the most ingenious and iconic vehicles ever built. Nearly 70 years after its debut, it is still a benchmark in automotive design and, furthermore, it captures something of the human spirit in a way that few industrial objects have achieved. It is useful, beautiful and happy (there’s one in the permanent collection at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City).

And so it should come as no surprise that a two-year-old boy who has a vivid imagination, supremely active sense of play and highly contagious joy would be fascinated with this little car, as they seem to personify each other. The vehicle is scaled well for a child, and it holds many surprises; the tiny two-cylinder engine hides in the back, most of the roof opens with one lift of the canvas, and all the curves and chrome act like a fun-house mirror (points if you can find the gas tank, which can be adventurous some to fill). The combination of it all works well and when underway, somehow feels happy. And it makes KAL pretty happy, too. Or maybe it’s simply that the tiny round headlights and chrome Fiat “mustache” badge make it look like the car is smiling at him, either way, it is a joy to be around him when he is around “uncle vroom-vroom”.

And we have a lot of fun together in it. Because of its tiny size (it weighs less than a large riding lawnmower and can fit on a sidewalk), I offer tours of the family compound, which entails driving around the yard, circling the various trees and features of our property, always with the large canvas roof open and always wearing huge smiles on our faces. It is joyful, fun and entertaining. In a world that is increasingly polarizing, fearful, and seemingly obsessed with the mundane, going on a family tour in the 500 is the antidote. KAL gets it.

God is reminding me through my nephew and this old car that joy is a remedy for the deadness we experience in daily life. God is joy. He is the bringer of life! And imagination, which is evident in my nephew and in every part of the design of this car, is a glimpse into His eternal power of creation. To see with the eyes of a child is to get back to the very basic understanding of reality, who is God, our joyful creator.

Sometimes I forget that the Good News is the real news and not what I see and hear through the media. I am grateful to have a little boy and a happy old car to bring me back to what is important in life, to what is ultimately real. And if you need a lift-me-up and happen to be under 5’10” with a narrow build and small feet, then come down to the family compound and I’ll let KAL and the Fiat remind you again of what it’s like to be a child.

A puzzling disconnect

During an interview for the Adirondack Daily Enterprise on April 28, 2020, Nicholas LaScala, a Clarkson student, spoke of a puzzling disconnect he witnessed while working on an internship with Clarkson Institute for Sustainable Environment. He described himself as a conservationist who is concerned about what it happening with the changes in climate. His project produced 14 videos on the reality of these changes in the Adirondacks. He said, “I talk with a lot of snowmobilers who say the winters aren’t as cold or as snowy anymore, but then I ask them about climate change and they are likely to say, ‘Oh no, climate change is a hoax.’” Most people said the winters are becoming unreliable. However, he stated “There is clearly a disconnect between scientists and the American people.” His approach was to focus on how climate change is affecting lives of people in the North Country right now.

What would some very devout religious people say if asked about their concerns relating to climate change? Would we find a disconnect with some of them also? The Church of the Presentation in Upper Saddle River, New Jersey, took this question seriously. They created a 43-page illustrated publication, Why Should We Care about Planet Earth, Our Home? A Religious Response to 9 Simple Questions. The first question addressed is: “Why is care for creation a Christian responsibility?” What would your response to this question be?

When we view our role in creation as dominators of creation rather than caretakers of God’s garden, we will miss its beauty and reflection of God’s goodness. It becomes simply an object for our use only and is given no value in itself. However, if we take St. Francis, we see nature as magnificent book in which God speaks to us and grants us a glimpse of his infinite beauty and goodness, then we experience God’s presence everywhere. St. Pope John Paul II stated, “The root cause of our violence with one another and the increasing destruction of all of created reality is our lack of proper respect for life. Respect for life and for the dignity of the human person extends also to the rest of creation.”

Retreat seeks to help female abuse victims find healing

By Darcy Fargo
Editor

Though operated by the Diocese of Albany, the Pyramid Life Center is located in Paradox, Essex County, within the Diocese of Ogdensburg and the Adirondack Park. The retreat, titled “The Way Retreat for Women: A Healing Retreat for Female Survivors of Abuse,” will be held May 20-22.

“This is for female survivors of all types of abuse,” said Brian Evers, Pyramid Life Center director. “This is a great opportunity for women to come away in a safe and private setting to be with other survivors and talk about their experiences in a faith context. Women of all faiths are welcome. The retreat is based in Catholic theology, but all faiths are welcome and invited. We have a team of good, solid, empathetic listeners who can journey with them on that weekend.”

According to the event description, the retreat includes “three days of guided meditations and prayer crafted around the Stations of the Cross will show you the steps Christ took to overcome dread, confusion, deep hurt, betrayal and anger not only for his experience of abuse—which culminated in his death on the cross and new life in the Resurrection—but for your abuse as well. You can choose to walk the Way with him, learn his ways, transform your pain and suffering into a new life, the life God has always wanted for you but that the sins of another has disfigured in countless ways.”

Evers indicated that similar retreats be planned for men in the future.

“We’d like to keep this as an annual offering,” Evers said. “Next, we’d like to offer a retreat for male survivors of abuse. Our goal is to develop a local team to do these retreats.”

Pyramid Life Center hosts a variety of retreats.

“We draw people from all over the country,” Evers said. “People come from all over the northeastern and from as far away as California. Most have some connection to the camp. For this particular retreat, we wanted to cast a wide net. We find a lot of people are looking for a chance to get away and disconnect while they grow in their faith and find healing.”

Previous Marian Lodge, a girls’ camp, Pyramid Life Center has been run by the Diocese of Albany since 1976. The property includes 750 acres, complete with lakes, streams and woods.

The cost to attend “The Way Retreat for Women” is $250.

Criticism over immigration continues for Biden

Immigration supporters say that while they welcomed President Joe Biden's 2020 election, when it comes to immigration policy, his administration, a year into its first term, has left much to be desired.

"There's no doubt that the Biden administration is a welcome departure from the appalling cruelty and blatant racism of the Trump years, but in key immigration areas, the Biden White House continues to uphold the hateful spirit of Trump's immigration policies," Hazel Conrreras, of the nonprofit Alianza Americas, said Feb. 1.

The organization was one of various groups to voice discontent with the White House on immigration policy one year after the Biden-Harris administration unveiled its strategy to address immigration flows at the southern border.

From being tied to pandemic health restrictions preventing entrance of some migrants into the U.S., to court battles blocking attempts at unraveling Trump-era immigration policies, the Biden White House has faced obstacles, to be sure. But there are those who say some of the wounds are self-inflicted.

The latest complaints are focused on reports that administration officials are expelling Venezuelan migrants to a third country, namely Colombia, if they recently resided there.

"The recent reports of the Biden administration removing Venezuelans through third countries is extremely disturbing," Menendez said in a statement. "By continuing to use a page from Trump's immigration enforcement playbook, this administration is turning its back on the immigrants who need our protection the most."

He referenced Venezuela's plight. The country has been embroiled in political conflict and an economy in a downward spiral that has caused more than 6 million Venezuelans to flee the once-rich nation since 2014, according to figures from the United Nations.

Many Venezuelans have fled to neighboring countries such as Colombia and Chile, where they have encountered hostility. On Jan. 30, a camp of Venezuelan migrants in northern Chile was trashed following protests against the migrants.

Other Venezuelans have made the longer trek to the U.S., where approximately 323,000 currently hold Temporary Protected Status and more recently have been trying to enter.

TPS, an immigration designation, grants work permit and reprieve from deportation to certain people whose countries have experienced natural disasters, armed conflicts or exceptional situations so they can remain temporarily in the United States.

But shortly after U.S. Customs and Border Protection said officials encountered more than 13,000 single adults from the country at the U.S.-Mexico border in December 2021, reports began trickling out about deportations of Venezuelans who had lived in Colombia.

Those like Menendez said that while the U.S. has concerns of letting in some migrants during the pandemic, Venezuelans are battling a "brutal dictatorship" at home as well as deteriorating humanitarian conditions.

"While I recognize the importance of carefully managing cross-border travel to facilitate our nation's pandemic response, now that nonessential travel has resumed at our nation's borders, the administration should rip off the Band-Aid, end these expulsions and restore the regular processing of asylum claims," Menendez said.

In late January, U.S. Department of Homeland Security Secretary Alejandro Mayorkas visited the southern U.S. border. On Jan. 27 in El Paso, Texas, he tried to make a distinction between the way the Biden and Trump administrations have handled incoming flows of migrants.

"We have ended policies of cruelty that defined the prior administration," he said.

But Menendez, in his statement, said that deporting Venezuelans was a "cruel course of action," calling it "unconscionable" and said it had to stop.

Alianza Americas also spoke of what it called Vice President Kamala Harris' "troubling" message during a trip to Mexico and Guatemala in June 2021 when she told would-be migrants: "Do not come."

"A message that many advocacy groups found troubling, as it does not account for the reality that many asylum-seekers and migrants have little choice in fleeing living conditions that are intolerable," the organization said.

Unfortunately, under the direction of Charles and Daniel Kinnane, lame humor mars what might have been a good-hearted drama about family reconciliation.

A climactic sequence, moreover, features visuals that register as more distasteful than amusing. Still, overall, the film is acceptable for teens and their elders, a bit of less-than-polite dialogue notwithstanding.

In February 2010, Payton led his squad to their first Super Bowl victory. Two years later, as early scenes show us, he was in the news for a very different reason.

An investigation by the NFL had implicated Payton in a scandal known as Bountygate, essentially a scheme to reward his players for injuring their opponents on the field. As a result, Payton was suspended from his job for the entire 2012 season.

At a loose end, Payton temporarily relocates to his home town of Argyle, Texas, a suburb of Fort Worth where his ex-wife, Beth (Jackie Sandler), and preteen son Connor (Tait Blum) still live. Finding Connor alienated by his neglect, formerly work-obsessed Payton tries to bond with the lad by becoming the offensive coordinator of the Warriors, the Pop Warner football team for which Connor plays.

Naturally, he soon over-shadows the other members of the coaching staff, made up of amiable skipper Troy Lambert (Taylor Lautner) and his buffoonish, perpetually tipping number two, Mitch Bizzone (Gary Valentine). Payton also initially allows the desire to win to crowd out the more modest goal of having fun.

The movie's serious moments are much superior to the jokes in Chris Titone and Keith Blum screenplay. A range of recurring gags about a noisy hotel room Jacuzzi, the New Age-y mannerisms of Connor's stepdad Jamie (Rob Schneider) and the past adventures of the Warriors' bus driver, Gus (Lavell Crawford), fall flat far more often than they succeed, leaving viewers in the lurch.

The script's points about prioritizing parenting over professional aims, the importance of loyal friendship such as that between Connor and the Warriors' woefully underperforming place-kicker, Harlan (Manny Magnus), and the need to let everyone – even Harlan – participate, are well-taken. But they would be more effective without the hollow jibes by which they're surrounded.

Surprisingly, the unappealing scenes referenced above, which showcase a barrage of projectile vomiting, do lead on to a genuinely ironic twist. But, as with much else in "Home Team," there's a penalty to be paid for every yard gained.

The film contains graphic gross-out humor, a few mild oaths and several crass expressions. The Catholic News Service classification is A-II – adults and adolescents. The Motion Picture Association rating is PG – parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for children.

Book on creation helps readers mull core questions

This excellent book is sponsored by the McGrath Institute for Church Life of the University of Notre Dame.

The book provides a sound introduction for general readers to church teaching on a number of theological and moral issues, providing an easy-to-read overview of and deep engagement with a number of core questions that Catholics, from teenagers to elderly adults, will find both interesting and illuminating.

It can also spark deeper discussions for groups in dialogue together for better understanding of our faith and how we can best live it, individually and communally, in this complex world of ours.

The book has six chapters and a brief conclusion, corresponding to the six days of creation and a thoughtful divine rest on the seventh.

The first chapter delves into the Christian doctrine of creation, which the author rightly sees as an act of divine love.

The Trinity, properly understood, is a unity but also a community. So too is humanity, created as the image and likeness of God, composed of individuals who are called to come together. Coming together in love involves devoting oneself to working for the betterment of all.

So Baglow, following the thinking of St. Thomas Aquinas, rightly defines love as a combination of justice and mercy, treating each other fairly, ensuring that offenders are stopped, but also forgiving them when they repent and seek to live better lives.

Chapter 2 raises the question of the interconnectedness of good and evil. Here the author cites the encounter of the French Catholic novelist, Francois Mauriac, when he was interviewed for an article in an Israeli paper by a young man in 1956.

Mauriac speaks of how his wife watched the cattle cars filled with Jewish children being taken somewhere, and how she wept when she later learned where they were taken, to the death camps. The journalist, Elie Wiesel, replies simply: "I was one of them." Mauriac's detailed response may make readers stifle their own tears.

Mauriac encouraged and helped the young man to write his memoir of his time in Auschwitz, the short book, "Night," which Baglow rightly notes "would forever change the world's understanding of the Holocaust." The chapter ends with a quote from the Bible offering hope for a better world of love and justice for all.

Chapters 3 and 4 engage the issue of reconciling the biblical stories of creation in the first and second chapters of Genesis with the science of evolution.

Baglow notes that science helps us understand how humanity came to be what it is, while Genesis teaches us the why of who we are and what we can strive to be, again individually and communally.

Chapters 5 and 6 deal with good and evil, what it means to sin and how one can find mercy and love in the sacred heart of Jesus, who sacrificed his human life so that we all might rise from our sins to live a new life of love, mercy, justice and forgiveness.

In Jesus' life, death and resurrection, all humanity can find a new hope, a new and renewed Adam and Eve. Jesus, he states, is "the final Adam."

I would note, in conclusion, that the creation/evolution of humanity is not yet complete or its hopes fully fulfilled.

This will only come at the end of time when Jesus returns as the Messiah and ushers in the age of permanent love and justice for all humanity. Then all will see Jesus as the final Adam.
Finding strength, happiness in the Lord

We’re not far into the new year, and it’s obvious that God’s beautiful world is far from what He planned. There is so much fear, danger, mistrust division, and hatred, and so much careless destruction of nature and life. We so need the consolation and strength of God’s Word.

Taking a look at Jeremiah first, we know that trust in the Lord can disperse, go out the door. You can almost hear them saying, “there, that hour is over!” They don’t get it. This is not the final punctuation mark in an hour-long recreation of the Last Supper. It is a renewal of our mission to “do good works, praising and blessing God.”

The celebrant priest has blessed us. Now the deacon reminds us that it is time for all of us, laity, consecrated and ordained, to hit the bricks and evangelize the world. It is appropriate for the deacon to give us those marching orders. The deacon spends most of his life with the laity. He is usually employed outside the Church. He is usually married and has children. The deacon worries about the mortgage payment, the heating bill, the food on the table, the future for their kids and their homework assignments and all those things you worry about.

The deacon chose to make his life more interesting, and yes, complicated, by listening to God’s voice that called him to ministry. The deacons in our diocese spent five or six years in formation before ordination. They persevered with the help of their spouses and children and the support of friends, relatives and colleagues.

Who better to encourage us each week to “Go in Peace, glorifying the Lord by your life”? We see the deacon most often as he assists the celebrant at Sunday liturgy. Every word he speaks, every action he performs in that liturgical role is for the congregation, the folks in the pews.

Deacon James K. Keating, a professor and published author, wrote in his book, A Deacon’s Retreat, “At the dismissal rite, the Eucharist processes out of the church doors in the hearts of parishioners as a living call from Christ to go and transform culture. In so doing, the people extend the Eucharistic presence of Christ by way of their service and witness.”

Let us go in peace to love and serve the Lord. Thanks be to God.

SCORIURE REFLECTIONS

February 13
Sixth Sunday of Ordinary Time

READINGS
Jeremiah 17:5-8
1 Corinthians 15:12, 16-20
Luke 6:17, 20-26

who trusts in the Lord...He is like a tree planted beside the waters that stretches out its roots to the stream...’ What a beautiful image, one God also uses in several of the psalms! It’s a message for government leaders, business people, and society in general. If we want peace, we must work for justice as God’s law directs us.

The Beatitudes teach us that God’s way for us contradicts what the “world” says will bring us happiness. If we seek riches and hoard our possessions instead of sharing them with the poor, if we engage in evil practices for the sake of popular approval, then we risk divine punishment and loss of eternal life. On the other hand, those who go against the stream and endure insult and abuse in this life should “rejoice and leap for joy... for your reward will be great in heaven.” It’s all about focusing (purity of mind and heart). By living the Beatitudes, we are restoring God’s plan from the beginning. Their power will also keep us in His Providence.

By the way, Jesus is sending us all a Valentine for tomorrow!

CALLED TO SERVE

The final dismissal

What commands come to mind when you think about the various ways groups of people are told the gathering is over? They can disperse, go home...or wherever.

I immediately thought of: fall-out, dismissed, scam, get-outa-here (this last item is most effective if yelled with a Brooklyn accent).

At Mass, the deacon says, “Go forth, the Mass is ended” or “Go and announce the Gospel of the Lord” or “Go in peace, glorifying the Lord by your life” or simply “Go in peace.” I still chant “The Mass is ended. Go in Peace.”

We respond, “Thanks be to God.”

Some interpret that dismissal, officially part of The Concluding Rites of Mass, as license to bolt out the door. You can almost hear them saying, “there, that hour is over!” They don’t get it. This is not the final punctuation.
Mission begins in the home

It is in loving our spouses, parents and children that we foster a community of concern for others' welfare and their wellbeing. When parents encourage their children to think about those less fortunate in other countries, or even our own, it begins creating a mindset of giving that will stay with their children for the rest of their lives.

By spending time with their grandparents and other elderly relatives, children learn about their past and gain a respect for those older than them. They learn the importance of life experience and develop a bond with those of a different age group.

Similarly, through spending time with their siblings and cousins of a similar age, they learn empathy, sympathy and compassion for those different from them. It is in growing and fostering these connections that they develop a support base for when they are older and learn to think about others.

Parents can also do activities with their children to further encourage a giving mindset and a missionary spirit. Encouraging children to give 10% of their allowance to charity, for example, trains them to remember this when they get older. Additionally, participating in Missionary Childhood Association (MCA), the rice bowl and similar appeals is a fun way for children to learn about the people for whom the money is raised. They are able to put a face to their giving, and it will stay with them longer.

Teaching children about cultures different from their own broadens their horizons and allows them to sympathize with those different from them. This helps them to think about others, not only in the missions, but in their daily lives as well.

Through activities and discussions involving the missions, we can begin building a giving and mission mindset early in life. This helps children to become more aware of and involved in the world around them, for both their benefit and the benefit of those less fortunate than themselves.

Both love and mission begin in the home.

"Called to Joy of Love" is National Marriage Week theme

WASHINGTON (CNS) - "Called to the Joy of Love" is the theme of this year's National Marriage Week USA Feb. 7-14. The week includes World Marriage Day, which this year is Feb. 13.

The annual observances "are an opportunity to focus on building a culture of life and love that begins with supporting and promoting marriage and the family," said a Feb. 3 news release from the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

The theme for this year's celebration of National Marriage Week mirrors the title of a national pastoral framework for marriage and family life ministry approved by the U.S. bishops in June 2021.

Each day of National Marriage Week, digital content will be made available through USCCB's social media channels: Twitter (@USCCB), Facebook (www.facebook.com/usccb) and Instagram (https://instagram.com/usccb).

Daily content will include a series of videos featuring how various ministries are fortifying married couples in the midst of challenges such as infertility, grief for the loss of a child, and the stressors of daily life.

Livestreamed events also will be available through USCCB social media channels.
Tributes mark legacy of philosopher, professor

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. (CNS) – When Alice von Hildebrand wasn’t promoting her late husband’s work, the Catholic philosopher, professor and author spent most of her life “reminding women of the privilege of femininity and the gift of motherhood,” said Rachel Bulman, a blogger and popular speaker. She made the comments in a Jan. 28 appreciation she wrote on the life and work of von Hildebrand, who died peacefully at home in New Rochelle Jan. 14. She was 98.

“Alice invited women to be women, to have their power rooted in their own femininity. She believed that women could be receptive, nurturing, demure, and empathetic while also wielding the dynamism of intellect and culture,” said Bulman in an essay posted on the website www.wordonfire.org. Bulman, who is a wife, mother of four and a regular contributor to the Word on Fire blog, said she never met von Hildebrand but knew her writing well, including her book “The Privilege of Being a Woman,” a reflection on “woman as a unique, mysterious creation of God and the blessings of traditional femininity.”

“She taught me that women do not need to all but become men in order to be empowered, but that femininity contains and wields a necessary power in and of itself,” Bulman said. “She also continues to inspire me toward a male/female complementarity that simultaneously honors the male and female differentiation while upholding gender equality.”

Bulman’s article on Alice von Hildebrand was among many tributes pouring in after her death. Her funeral Mass was celebrated Jan. 22 at her parish church, Holy Family in New Rochelle. Alice Marie Jourdain, known as “Lily” to family and friends, was born March 11, 1923, in Brussels, Belgium, the third of Henri and mother Marthe Jourdain’s five children. The family fled to France in May 1940 when the Nazis invaded Belgium. Alice was 17. In June of that year, she and her sister Louloute went to New York to live with an aunt and uncle.

Alice enrolled at Manhattanville College, where she earned a bachelor’s degree. But before she finished her degree, she began taking classes at Jesuit-run Fordham University in New York that were taught by her future husband, Dietrich von Hildebrand, a German-born Catholic philosopher and religious writer who left a teaching position in Germany to escape the Nazis.

Alice first heard Dietrich speak in 1942 – on “the readiness to change.” “From the first moment he began to speak,” she recalled, “I felt that he was feeding my soul with a food that I had always longed for. He spoke out of a deep recollection, and I drank in every word.”

She became acquainted with Dietrich’s first wife, Margarete (who died in 1957), and became an integral member of the Hildebrands’ circle of friends. Soon after beginning her studies with Dietrich, she began to assist him as his secretary. Over the coming decades, she typed many of his book manuscripts, which he always wrote by hand, and translated a number of his essays into English.

In December 1947, Alice was hired for a three-week substitute position at Hunter College and then was offered a permanent teaching position. “From the start, she faced opposition from her own colleagues, in part out of professional rivalry – she quickly became one of the most popular professors – and in part because of anti-Catholic sentiment,” according to an obituary in the Hildebrand Project. “The latter surprised her, because she never spoke of Catholicism in the classroom. The difficulty was that several of her students began converting to Catholicism,” it said. “She soon realized that it was her defense of the objectivity of truth against the prevailing relativism of the day that prepared the ground for these conversions. ‘If someone finds the truth,’ she would say, ‘he automatically finds God, because God is the truth.’”

She and Dietrich married in July 1959. She often spoke of their unique partnership: complete unity in love of philosophy, music, literature, art “and above all, their Catholic faith,” the Hildebrand Project said. “They had a great love for the sacrality of the liturgy and the church’s heritage of sacred music. Together they formed an extraordinary partnership in bearing witness to Christian culture and Christian life,” it added.

After his death, Alice wrote “By Grief Refined” about the experience of becoming a widow. She also saw her primary mission as preserving his legacy. Besides Hunter College, she taught at several other institutions, including the Catechetical Institute of St. Joseph’s Seminary in Dunwoodie, New York; the Franciscan University of Steubenville in Ohio, where she served on the board of trustees from 1987 to 1999; the Thomas More Institute in Rome; Ave Maria College in Michigan; and the Notre Dame Institute in Arlington, Virginia.

Alice retired from Hunter College in 1984 and went on the lecture circuit, speaking in 35 U.S. states, Canada, Mexico and in many countries in South America and in Europe.

Throughout her career she received numerous awards and three honorary degrees, including from Franciscan University. In 2013, she was received the Grand Cross of the Equestrian Order of St. Gregory. Among her books are “The Soul of a Lion: The Life of Dietrich von Hildebrand,” published in 2000, and “Memoirs of a Happy Failure,” a 2014 autobiography. She wrote she wrote numerous essays on the nature of education, reverence, liturgy, marriage and other themes. The website www.alicevonhildebrand.org is devoted to her work.
