Following the Good Shepherd

On May 8, we celebrated World Day of Prayer for Vocations.
In this edition of the North Country Catholic, we celebrate those who are living their vocations to the priesthood, diaconate and consecrated life, and "Following the Good Shepherd."

"The Shepherd does not lose sight of us but walks beside us so that we do not stray from the flock," writes Sister Mary Eamon Lyng, a Sister of St. Joseph and Vocations coordinator for the diocese. "We can trust the Shepherd not to lead us astray.

Pope: Divisions make fertile ground for conflict

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – Doing nothing to overcome the divisions among Christians means allowing tensions to fester and even feed conflict, Pope Francis said.

"Ignoring the divisions among Christians, whether out of habit or out of resignation, means tolerating that pollution of hearts which makes fertile ground for conflict," he said May 6 during a meeting with members of the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity.

"In every Christian, whether he knows it or not, there is the preaching of Jesus: 'Do not judge; do not condemn your brother,'" he said.

As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, many ecumenical initiatives were canceled or moved online, he said, it also had the benefit of creating a "renewed awareness" among Christians that they belong to one family, an awareness "rooted in the experience of sharing the same fragility and of being able to count only on God's help."

The pandemic proved the wisdom of 50 years of ecumenical work emphasizing that "for a Christian it is not possible, it is not viable, to go it alone within one's confession," he said. "Either we go together, fraternally, or we do not walk."

But, he said, even before the pandemic was truly over, "the entire world was faced with a tragic new challenge — the war currently underway in Ukraine," he said.

Pope Francis called Russia's war on Ukraine "as cruel and senseless as any war," but said its geopolitical impact "has a greater dimension and threatens the entire world."

While the pope did not get into how the war, supported by Russian Orthodox Patriarch Kirill of Moscow, is negatively impacting ecumenical relations as well as inter-Orthodox relations, he insisted every Christian church must look at how it may be fomenting tension and how it can contribute to peace.

"We must ask ourselves: What have the churches done and what can they do to contribute to the development of a global community of fraternity based on the practice of social friendship," he said, quoting from his encyclical, "Fratelli Tutti."
Laughter at the wrong moment

Darcy L. Fargo

He was trying to make me laugh during a prayer service. I was attending an event in Watertown with a camera around my neck. An outdoor event. I had plenty of space to photograph from different angles, and I was circling around the area where people were gathered taking advantage of that opportunity. As I made camera adjustments to frame a shot, I saw in the edge of my view a face that stood out.

One of the priests attending the event was looking directly into the camera with a big grin – the kind I usually describe as a “cheesing smile” – like when a little kid says “cheese” and settles on an overpronounced fake smile for a photo.

The expression caught me off guard, and I started laughing. The involved priest seemed pretty pleased with himself for getting me going. I immediately thought of my father.

My father can’t be a funny guy. Sitting next to him at a wedding or funeral or other Mass involvements getting poked in the ribs, having your hand squeezed extremely hard during the Sign of Peace or being subjected to another action intended to make a person squirm or make a noise. His father – my grandfather – was the same way. It’s simultaneously annoying and endearing.

While part of me says prayer services, funerals, weddings... aren’t the time for clowning around, the people I know who can’t behave in church are among the most joyful people I’ve ever met. Whether a priest or a husband and father, they just can’t help but share their joy and craziness with others.

I’m fairly certain that at least part of their joy stems from being where they’re supposed to be – my dad with his family, and this priest with his family. They find joy living their vocations. They share that joy with others, but they do it in their own ways.

Isn’t that what we celebrate in this edition? We celebrate the ways God calls each of us to follow Him. We celebrate the joy that comes in living our vocations and how we share that joy with the world in the service of the one who gave it to us.

Sometimes, that joy is shared by making people laugh when they shouldn’t.

Hearing, following God’s call

During this Easter season, I have often meditated on what it must have been like to be one of those original apostles of the Lord, the original 12. They had sent a time living with and learning from the Lord, hearing his message and recognizing his call. Then they suddenly experienced his arrest and crucifixion and then the events of the Lord’s resurrection to new life. In faith and trust they accepted the challenge and vocation to bring Jesus and his message to their world.

This was certainly the most important time of our Catholic Church’s history – a time of formation. As we now realize all that our Church is in this present time and all that it experienced at the time of the formation, I for one believe it is all a miracle that we are now this Christian community. Somehow, in the wisdom of the Holy Spirit those apostles formed and followed the Lord Jesus to make this Church strong.

The Acts of the Apostles describe for us the descent of the Holy Spirit on the apostles, transforming them from fear-filled men into bold and powerful preachers and teachers of the Lord’s message of love and peace. We are told that those original apostles became unafraid even to risk their lives and become martyrs of the Lord Jesus.

They trusted in the formation they received from Jesus. They trusted in his guidance and the leadership of the Holy Spirit. They constantly dedicated themselves to the vocation of being followers of the Lord Jesus.

Even today we believe that the Lord Jesus continues to reach out to each one of us, calling us to recognize that we discover our vocation as those who the Lord needs to bring the word and message of our Savior to this world – bringing to people of this world, to our parishes and to our communities all that Jesus brought to our world.

Many of us answer that call by becoming ordained as priest and deacons, as well as bishops, ordained as were those original apostles ordained at the Last Supper.

Through the power of the Holy Spirit, we now accept this call or our God to seek the gifts of ordination, to live out the Lord’s call to bring the sacraments of the Lord to his people – the Lord’s baptism, the blessed Eucharist through the holy Mass, the Lord’s forgiveness through the sacrament of penance, the important support of the anointing of the sick and the dying.

Our Lord continues to call many to follow him through the vocation of marriage. Spiritually, marriage is a sacrament and a spiritual union. Through this sacrament, the Church community is formed as a family, a vocation of love and peace and life in the power of the Holy Spirit, leading to families, parents and children discovering the Lord Jesus and his message – a Christian community, a powerful and foundational part of this world.

Our Lord continues to call many to the vocation of the single life alone or as a religious. This is a vocation – a calling, a challenge of reaching out as followers of Jesus to make this world a better place in the spirit of Our Savior.

All are apostles, disciples of the Lord. Just as those early followers of Jesus were, we are called to trust the Lord in faith, responding to the Lord’s call to make our world a community of peace. We know only too well that this trust has often failed. Our world is very vulnerable.

Many turn from the Lord. Many have failed to follow the way of the Savior. So, Our Lord continues to call all to be renewed in the Holy Spirit, to discover their vocation, to discover how to use well the gifts that they have been blessed with by the Holy Spirit. Each of us has been called to a vocation as followers of the Lord Jesus, called to make our Church, our parish a power force to transform this world in the Lord’s love and peace.
Called to love and to follow the Good Shepherd

By Sister Mary Eamon Lyng, SSJ
Vocation Coordinator

My sheep hear my voice; I know them, and they follow me. I give them eternal life, and they shall never perish. – John 10:27-30.

On this Good Shepherd Sunday, there are some "active verbs" that Jesus puts out there for all of us to ponder: “hear,” “know,” “follow,” “give.” These "active" verbs used by the Good Shepherd are the voice of Jesus calling each of us to live our vocation to its fullness with His grace and love. These verbs are the stages of growth in the call to continue the work of Jesus’ mission in the Church as a husband and wife, priest or brother, deacon, consecrated religious or single. It is a call to encounter more deeply a loving relationship of the Good Shepherd and to follow Him.

The purpose of the World Day of Prayer for Vocations is to listen more attentively to the call to the ordained ministries (priesthood and diaconate), consecrated life in all its forms (male and female religious life, societies of apostolic life, consecrated virginity), secular institutes in their diversity of services and membership, and to the missionary life. The Church is attentive to the Good Shepherd’s instructions to “pray the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into His harvest” (Mt 9:38; Lk 10:2).

To “hear” the voice of the Shepherd is to be attentive to the tenor and sound of His call. The Good Shepherd knows each one of us by name. Just as the Father knows the Son, the Son knows the Father. So, too, for one who “knows” the Shepherd’s voice already has an intimate relationship with the Shepherd through deep listening in the quiet and solitude of one’s heart in prayer.

This mutual knowing is the communion of life between Jesus and the person who is discerning the call for a deeper love and service to Him. The Shepherd keeps prodding until there is a response to “follow” Him more closely for the sake of the whole flock of sheep. We are ready to leave everything behind and to follow Jesus.

Once there is the “Yes” to follow the Shepherd, it does not mean this is a “once and for all” response. It is a daily response of a loving relationship through “thick and thin” of daily living of the “ups and downs” of good times and not so good times. There is always the daily grace that strengthens us on the journey. The Shepherd does not lose sight of us but walks beside us so that we do not stray from the flock. We can trust the Shepherd not to lead us astray. The Good Shepherd feeds us with His Body and Blood in the Eucharist, food for the journey, and refreshes us.
Called to love

More than ever, the harvest is plentiful but the laborers are few. For those discerning the next step, will you answer the call? Will not the Good Shepherd see to it that His flock will not perish at the end of life but will be given the promise of eternal life?

“There are the ones who have survived the time of great distress; they have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb....For the Lamb who is in the center of the throne will shepherd them and lead them to springs of life-giving water, and God will wipe away every tear from their eyes” (Revelation 7:14b-17).

What are some of the times that you have heard the Shepherd’s voice? What distractions make it difficult to listen? Do you believe Jesus may be calling you to be a priest, a deacon, a consecrated religious, a consecrated virgin?

We are abundantly blessed with the leadership of the shepherd of our diocese, Bishop Terry R. LaValley, and the priests who serve and minister to the people of the North Country.

We have also been blessed with religious congregations serving in the diocese as teachers, catechists, parish coordinators, hospital ministers and, above all, in lives and ministries of prayer. These women and men continue to serve in the pastoral needs of the people of God. They bring to God’s people His power of love, sense of mission and commission to an unknown future that may lead to an encounter with other seekers of God’s presence that will transform lives.

Jesus’ invitation, “Come, follow Me,” is ever the gift and the mystery of vocation.

The Good Shepherd is calling again, “Be with me, now and forever.”

Pope Francis urges the Church “to continue to promote vocations, to touch the hearts of the faithful, and to enable each of them to discover with gratitude God’s call in their lives and to find courage to say “yes” to God.”

Let us respond with joy, “Yes, Lord, I give you my heart.”

FOLLOWING THE GOOD SHEPHERD

‘It was about a deeper call’

By Mary Beth Bracy
Contributing Writer

PLATTSBURGH — “From the time I was a young child I believed I was called to be a religious,” shared Sister Debbie Blow, a Dominican. “Dominican Sisters of St. Catherine of Siena taught me and also taught at schools in the North Country. Sister Stephanie Frennette, OP was a teacher and mentor for me. But, I thought, ‘I can’t be a Sister, I don’t know how to sing and I don’t think that I can sleep in a habit and a veil.’”

Sister Debbie grew up mostly in Ellenburg, the second oldest of 10 children and the oldest girl, and she was in the first graduating class of Northern Adirondack Central High School. Following, she attended Mater Dei College in Ogdensburg for a semester in 1971, but became seriously ill.

“I knew that I needed to stop running from the call,” she said. “Sister Steph came to Mater Dei and brought me back home to my parents’ house.”

Then, Sister Debbie worked as a bookkeeper for Agway Petroleum for about two-and-a-half years.

“I was pumping gas one day and said, ‘This is it, I’m done running, and I need to let my boss know.’ He looked at me and said, ‘If you stay, I will double your salary.’ That was the moment that I knew becoming a sister was right for me; I knew it wasn’t about the money, it was about a deeper call. What drew me to the Dominican Sisters is that they stood for truth, justice, hospitality, and joy.”

Sister Debbie said her mother was supportive of her decision and continued to serve as a source of inspiration in her life.

“The morning I was leaving to enter the convent my mom had handwritten me a note and wanted to make sure that I didn’t miss it,” she said. “She said I was doing what I always wanted to do, to go and be happy. And, if it doesn’t work out, then we’ll always be here. She taught me devotion to the Rosary and devotion to Mary. I pray the Memorare. My mom died at beginning of Covid with a Rosary in her hands. My mom was faithful to the end. She was a strong, courageous woman who faced a lot of obstacles in her life, a lot of pain and struggles. She continues to guide and inspire me as well. I also have the blessing of being able to care for Sister Steph, giving back for all of the times that she put up with me as a student.”

Sister Debbie attended an intercommunity Dominican novitiate in Dover, Massachusetts, on January 12, 1974. In 1978, Sister Debbie received her bachelor’s degree from Providence College, and in 1984 she earned her master’s degree from St. Michael’s College. Sister Debbie was awarded an honorary humanities doctorate from Providence College in 2009.

Initially, Sister Debbie was sent to Plattsburgh to teach at St. Peter’s. She later became vice-principal and principal. After St. Peter’s, she worked at Seton Catholic as a campus minister and Scripture teacher.

Then, there was a hurricane in Nicaragua. A family who went to St. Peter’s and attended Seton at the time was from there.

“When I first went over to Nicaragua, I didn’t think of it as founding the mission,” Sister Debbie said. “I thought of it as doing the right thing, not a long time commitment. I brought a student who I was told was going to be trouble. As we were coming down the mountain in an old rickety bus, I was sitting with this kid and he said ‘Sister you know what the greatest sin would be? If we never came back.’ It was at that moment that I knew it couldn’t just be one and done. We would never be empowering them or serving them in the way that they need to be served.”

So, Sister Debbie sat down with Yamilette Flores and Eve McGill, and North Country Mission of Hope was born. Sister Debbie still operates Mission of Hope today. That was 75 trips ago.

“I am still deathly afraid of flying, don’t like the heat, spiders or snakes,” she said. “That’s when you know that you are being sustained, responding to a personal call by something greater than yourself. My ministry and vocation are intertwined.”

In 1995, when communities were merging due to dwindling numbers of sisters, the Vatican permitted her order to reviv in a new congregation — Dominican Sisters of Hope.

At one point in her early 40s, Sister Debbie had breast cancer.

“I struggled if God was calling me to stay in the religious life,” she said. “My greatest sacrifice is not having my own children. My greatest joy is not having my own children, so that I’m not restricted. I was able to see all the kids I’ve ever taught or encountered differently.”

Sister Debbie encouraged anyone who is considering a vocation to religious life to explore the calling and learn more.

“I encourage those who are discerning to talk to nuns and sisters of different ages,” she said. “Find out what makes the blood pump in them, what is their passion in life. By doing that you understand if it’s for you. I am incredibly blessed in being a Dominican Sister of Hope because we are often on the cutting edge in response to injustice. Our sisters worked in rural Mississippi, in Oklahoma with Native Americans, and in schools, inner city ghettos, health care for the poor, and my ministry. I love being a Dominican Sister. We aren’t afraid to ask hard questions and speak the truth to empower. I am truly inspired by so many sisters in my congregation. They are truly a delight for me.”

Sister Debbie said she views her religious vows as instrumental in developing a relationship with Jesus and others.

“The vow of obedience is really about listening with one’s heart and asking about how to live in the congregation,” she said. “Poverty of spirit allows us to be open handed, like what Jesus spoke of in the Beatitudes. Celibacy isn’t lessening but widening my circle of love.”

Sister Debbie also loves photography, writing poetry, and watching sports. She often played with the students when she was younger – even football and dodgeball.

“I want people to see she’s real: what you see is what you get,” Sister Debbie said. “I always tried to be that, as a teacher and principal. I’ve always tried to say that someone can approach me or talk to me.”
Called by God and the bishop

By Deacon Kevin Mastellon
Contributing Writer

OGDENSBURG — Like many vocation stories, Deacon James Crowley’s started early in his life. Even as a kid Crowley knew there was a calling, something different about his interests. Now he is a husband, father and deacon, all bona fide vocations, and he is chancellor of the Diocese of Ogdensburg.

There is an adult education assumption that says “as people grow older, they gain experience through the choices they make. These experiences accumulate, becoming a reservoir that adults can draw on as a personal resource for continued learning.”

Deacon Crowley’s life personifies that axiom.

He grew up in the Buffalo area, and he attended public schools, and weekly religious education classes through his local church.

“St. Catherine of Siena was a very active ’70s parish. It is now closed by the way. It wasn’t the greatest religious ed program, but I had a lot of great teachers and good priests to watch,” Deacon Crowley said.

One teacher in particular, Deacon Crowley said, was his Confirmation teacher.

“Ray, I don’t remember his last name, kind of got through to us that it was our responsibility to pay back, that I owed something,” Deacon Crowley said.

But the future deacon still could not put his finger on the “something.”

Deacon Crowley found that he did not have to work especially hard to succeed in grammar and high school. He was not prepared to study in college and so, by his own admission, did not do well at the start. He worked for a while and “had a good time, but there was a lack of peace.”

Enter Father Bob Fink, associate pastor at Deacon Crowley’s parish church. Father Fink was a Wadhams Hall graduate. After long talks, Father Fink convinced Deacon Crowley, then in his 20s to enter the school, which was then a seminary college. Deacon Crowley was on a path to the priesthood.

At Wadhams he found what he called a disincentive.

“I did not feel I was a strong enough man to do that, live as a priest,” he said. “That was confirmed after my sophomore year at Wadhams when I met Rita at Guggenheim.”

Guggenheim Center is 150 acres in the Adirondack Mountains near Saranac Lake. The diocese operates a summer camp for youth 12 to 18 years during July and August. The camp is in operation from mid-May through mid-October and is available for diocesan individuals, groups, or non-profit organizations. Registrations are made through the diocesan office. It is ironic that many aspects of the Guggenheim operation now fall under the chancellor’s watchful eye.

Deacon Crowley and Rita Seymour, his future wife, were both on staff that summer at camp. Deacon Crowley finished his bachelor’s degree work at Wadhams and graduated but gave up any thoughts of the priesthood. He and Rita, an Ogdensburg native, were married.

Rita, a nurse practitioner specializing in pediatric care, and Deacon Crowley were married in 1991. They have three daughters, Allison, Bethany and Margaret. Bethany is a medical student in Syracuse. Margaret is in the veterinary program at Long Island University. She too, hopes to become a specialist in veterinary medicine. Allison is involved in consultant work, mostly on federal government projects.

Early in their marriage, Deacon Crowley says, he and Rita talked about the diaconate.

“We had discussions that someday I would probably enter the deacon formation program,” Deacon Crowley said.

The business, (Deacon Crowley operated a successful computer consulting company in Ogdensburg) and raising children had a priority over going back to school. When the kids were older, two were in college, that’s when the bug really bit."

A deacon class had already been formed. Crowley mentioned his interest to Father Joseph Morgan, rector of St. Mary’s Cathedral parish.

Father Morgan advised the future deacon, “I better talk to my brother-in-law.”

Deacon Crowley’s brother-in-law is Father James W. Seymour. At the time, Father Seymour was vicar of Clergy for the diocese.

He spoke with Father Seymour and with Monsignor Robert H. Aucoin, director of the Deacon formation program, about joining. They gave their blessing.

“My business was stable. I had a good group of employees, so I knew I could cut back my hours a little to devote time to study,” Deacon Crowley said. “At the start there was less stress because two of the girls were already in college, so I only had one to chase around instead of three. So, I started formation. I think I was the only guy who walked in not already knowing everybody.”

Sometime during the second year, “I remember it was a Thursday,” Bishop Terry R. LaValley sent Crowley an email inviting him to be the new deaconosta. Crowley had been on staff at Guggenheim and ran the sports camp. He was fairly well known around the diocese.

Rita wanted to know what might have prompted the meeting. Were his Canon Law assignments up to date? Was he not meeting the chancellor’s expectations in class? The deacon aspirant told his wife all was well in class.

“I assured her everything was OK,” Deacon Crowley said. “He (Bishop) probably has a committee he wants me to be on or a job he wants me to take.”

Rita asked, “what job would that be?”

“I don’t know,” Deacon Crowley quipped, “something between chancellor and janitor.”

He says he was kidding about chancellor but was aware the chancellor at the time, Sister Jennifer Votra, a Sister of St. Joseph, had just announced her retirement.

Bishop offered Deacon Crowley the position of chancellor. It is an appointed position with Canonical responsibility and other duties as directed by the bishop.

He accepted the position. He sold his company and continued his formation to become a deacon. He was ordained in October 2017.

One task that fell to the Chancellor (or was it to a deacon at the Cathedral?) was live streaming. “I had a skill set I brought to the job that had nothing to do with the job,” Deacon Crowley said.

At the start of the pandemic restrictions, Deacon Crowley also became, with the diocesan IT department, the go-to guy for video/audio live streaming information and introduced the practice at St. Mary’s Cathedral in Ogdensburg. The Marie deacons and deacons in the diocese also introduced live streaming for weekend Mass and turned to Deacon Crowley for advice. Most of that work has been handed-off to others now, “but every once in a while a guy in an alb and stole leaves the sanctuary to fix a camera.”

“I love the Chancellor job,” he added. “There is a lot of work, and there is always more to do, but I still enjoy doing it. Rita talks about retiring but I think my head would explode if I retired.”

Though he’s not done working yet, Deacon Crowley has thought about his future.

“I’m sure somebody will find something they want me to take care of,” he said. “Spokes by a guy who has accumulated plenty of experience.”

Newly ordained priest grows in ministry

By Catherine Bracy
Contributing Writer

WATERTOWN – Ordained in October of 2021, Father Matthew “Matt” S. Conger said he continues to build on what he learned in formation as he begins his priestly ministry.

“I have learned that although seminary prepares you well for the questions that may come your way or give you the resources you need, you can look up answers,” said Father Conger, currently serving as parochial vicar for Blessed Sacrament Parish in Watertown – St. Anthony’s, St. Patrick’s and Holy Family churches.

“What you think the parish life and priesthood will be like is much different. Every day is filled with a different but good challenge, and you just never know where you will be needed that day.”

Raised in Ogdensburg, Father Conger is a graduate of Ogdensburg Free Academy. He then completed his undergraduate studies at St. Charles Borromeo Seminary in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, before spending a couple of years studying at the Josephinum in Columbus, Ohio, before completing his studies and formation at Christ the King Seminary in Buffalo.

Father Conger said he became open to following God’s call to the priesthood because of the example of his parish priest and a desire to help others.

“The thing that inspired me to become a priest was the great example that my former pastor Father Jim (Father James Shurtleff) showed me,” he said. “I always wanted to do something involving service for my community, and (Father Shurtleff’s) willingness to give to those in need and the great service he gave to all is what led me to consider becoming a priest.”

Since being ordained, Father Conger said he’s found service to be a source of grace and happiness for him, as well.

“Some of the great joys of being a priest is being there for your people in all of the good times but also in the bad times,” he said. “You get welcomed into everyone’s family. Another great joy that may seem weird is that hearing confession is a great joy to me. Being there when Christ sheds his mercy upon someone who’d just poured their heart out is something that brings me joy to know: that our Lord is a merciful Lord.”

Though his ministry has been fulfilling and joyful so far, it hasn’t been without challenges.

“Some of the challenges are learning that you are no longer in the seminary and that people now look at you more than they ever did when you were in the seminary,” Father Conger said. “It is also just that adjustment to the parish life – what it is like to live with other priests and making sure that there is a good balance in your schedule.”

Father Conger said he encourages men who are still discovering their vocations to consider the priesthood.

“Some words of encouragement that I could give to someone who is discerning a vocation is to not be afraid of asking about the priesthood,” he said. “Though if you feel that calling and think you may want to discern the priesthood, or any vocations for that matter, it is ok to try it out. Just because one enters the seminary does not mean that he will become a priest. Though what it does is forms us into becoming a better Christian, knowing that we are truly following the Lord’s will for us.”

Father Conger starts new role in Vocations Office

By Darcy Fargo
Editor

OGDENSBURG – In addition to his role at Blessed Sacrament Church in Watertown, Bishop Terry R. LaValley has appointed Father Matthew S. Conger to a new diocesan role, associate director of Vocations.

Father Conger said he feels his role as a newly ordained, young priest gives him a unique ability to connect with individuals who may be discerning vocations. He joins Father Christopher C. Carrara, Vicar for Clergy and director of Vocations and Seminarians, and Sister Mary Eamon Lyng, a Sister of St. Joseph and diocesan Vocations coordinator, on the diocesan Vocations staff.

“I can relate well to the generation we usually think of as being at that point where they’re discerning where God is calling them and where they want to go in life,” said Father Conger. “Working in collaboration with Father Chris and Sister Eamon, I’ll be going to visit schools and college campuses, helping create vocations discernment groups around the diocese and working with those groups, and just being a presence for Vocations and answering questions. It’s all working toward continuing to create a culture of vocations.”

While the role is new and continues to evolve, Father Conger said establishing discernment groups is a key priority for him and the Vocations office.

“Talking with the seminarians so far, having discernment groups was very important to a lot of them,” Father Conger said. “When I was discerning, we had a great discernment group in Potsdam. It helps to have community and opportunities to pray, learn and discern.”

One of his key challenges in creating such groups will be identifying young men who are open to God’s call.

“T o get the groups going, we have to find the guys,” he said. “Initially, it seems like it’ll be a lot of work getting the word out and getting to know people. Watertown has a young adult group. I plan to work with that group, collaborate with the youth ministers and go out to different parishes and talk to people. I also plan to be at Camp Guggenheim this summer, and that’s a good place to find people who may be interested.”

Father Conger, who started in his new role at the end of April, said he’s eager to see where the role takes him and how it develops.

“I’m very excited,” he said. “Like all things, it’ll have its challenges. But I think it’ll be very rewarding. One of my major messages is ‘just because you go to a discernment group or consider entering a seminary or convent, that doesn’t mean that’s what you’ll do. Discerning is all about becoming better Christians and growing in relationship with Christ.’”

Environmental Stewardship
What’s on your list?
Last Sunday we celebrated the wonderful gift of our mothers who gave us life and continue to sustain us spiritually in one way or another. We are all familiar with Saint Francis of Assisi’s prayer of creation where he speaks of the earth as our mother. Praised be my Lord for our mother the Earth, Which sustains us and keeps us, And yields diverse fruits, And flowers of many colors, and grass.
The indigenous people also have a deep sense of our connectedness with the earth and address her as Mother Earth in their Thanksgiving Prayers. These prayers stretch our view of life beyond our human mothers to include the very ground of our being as noted in the first chapter of Genesis. In the latest Catholic social encyclical, Laudato Si’, we are called to care for creation and to reconcile our relationships with God, creation and one another. As mentioned last week, when we examine our conscience, we usually include only our relationship with God, ourselves and our sisters and brothers. In the Eco-Consciousness Exam, a decathlon of the exam found in Ignatius spirituality, it widens our world view to include all of creation that nourishes all of life.
To begin the Eco-Exam take a moment to be aware of your breathing and the presence of God within and around you. Then, pray the six steps:
I give thanks to God for creation and for being wonderfully made.
I ask for the grace to see creation as God does—in all its splendor and suffering.
I ask for the grace to look closely to see how my life choices impact creation and the poor and vulnerable.
I ask for the grace of conversion towards ecological justice and reconciliation.
I ask for the grace to reconcile my relationship with God, creation and humanity, and to stand in solidarity through my actions.
I offer a closing prayer for the earth and the vulnerable in our society.

Dehumanizing one another

A female sharpshooter nicknamed “Lady Death” has recently become a Ukrainian folk hero for defiantly attacking Russian soldiers undercover. The young markswoman fought for several years in eastern Ukraine against Kremlin-backed separatists, before shifting to the front line of hostilities as Russia initiated its full-scale invasion of Ukraine. Her real name has not been made public and photos hide her identity by blurring her face or showing her with a mask. Long range sniper attacks are her area of expertise. Whenever we move in the direction of believing that others are not human beings, we risk diminishing our own humanity in the exchange. Even in the face of great depravity, we cannot fall prey to thinking that those who commit horrific evils or even war crimes are somehow no longer really human beings.

I was reminded of this recently as I viewed online videos of armed drones firing on Russian tanks traveling along Ukrainian highways. As they took successive missile hits, Russian soldiers could be seen launching themselves out of the hatch and escaping from the tank before it went up in a fireball. Sometimes they would barely get out alive, only to collapse and die by the side of the road. If the mother of a Russian tank driver were to watch a video of her son trying to escape this way under fire, she would be justly indignant, offended and even more saddened if anyone dared to declare he was “not a human being.” In the posted remarks section following these videos, in fact, many commented on the hideousness of a world in which 18-year-old boys have to perish in this manner.

By demonizing others, we no longer acknowledge the transcendent realities common to all human beings: our shared desire for truth, goodness, beauty, and love. Whenever we ignore or negate the important commonalities that unite us in our humanity and instead choose to dehumanize others, the consequences will be dire. Historically, the use of language that dehumanizes others has been a key tactic in marshaling support for atrocities.

Such language has always been central, for example, to acts of genocide. During the latter part of the twentieth century, the Tutsis were often denigrated as cockroaches and snakes in Rwanda, culminating in approximately 800,000 men, women and children being murdered during a twelve week period in 1994. In Nazi Germany, Jews and other enemies of the Third Reich, including persons with disabilities, were contemptuously viewed not as humans, but as vermin and rats, in order to justify their systematic extermination.

President Abraham Lincoln strongly objected to treating any person, whether slave or free, as “less-than-human” during his 1858 public debate with Stephen A. Douglas. Lincoln rebuffed the idea that African Americans fell outside the “all men are created equal” clause, declaring such a concept to be marked by “an evil tendency, if not an evil design.” He repudiated every attempt to dehumanize the negro... and prepare the public mind to make property, and nothing but property of the negro in all the States of the Union.”

Still in our nation today, the process of dehumanization continues to derail our thinking and diminish our collective conscience, especially when it comes to those humans who are very young and still in the womb, as well as the elderly and the infirm, the mentally-fragile, and those in vulnerable medical situations, such as newborn children with genetic defects. By dehumanizing these individuals in a “progressive” society, we can subject them to a range of unjust actions, from abortion to infanticide to euthanasia. Preborn children, for example, have undergone this dehumanization for decades, being denigrated as “tissue,” “pregnancy,” or “clumps of cells,” to paper over the brutal reality of abortion. The website of Planned Parenthood, to cite one instance, defines a suction abortion as a procedure where a “suction device” is used to “take the pregnancy tissue out of your uterus.”

We need to fight against dehumanization both by recognizing and opposing its occurrence in our midst, and by recognizing it within ourselves. The temptation to dehumanize people who are themselves dehumanizing others can also be very strong. In the end, our shared humanity, from the weakest to the strongest, from youngest to oldest, constitutes an ineradicable bond of unity that should prompt us to spur our own dehumanizing impulses. Renewing hope for conflict-laden humanity begins precisely in the acknowledgement of each other’s humanity, strengthening those fraternal bonds on which peace is grounded.

VATICAN reaffirms pope’s willingness to go to Moscow

Pope Francis’ secretary of state reaffirmed the pope’s offer to go to Moscow personally to try to convince President Vladimir Putin to stop his war on Ukraine but said the Kremlin had yet to respond. Cardinal Pietro Parolin, secretary of state, told reporters late May 4, “There has been an offer from the Holy Father to go to Moscow to meet personally with President Putin. We are waiting for them to tell us what they want, what they intend to do.”

“The thing that we always say is that the Holy Father says he is concerned about the situation in Ukraine and therefore I think it is important to further this offer,” Parolin added. “I believe that it is important to keep this offer open and to keep the hope alive that perhaps the situation will improve and we can have a meeting.”

VATICAN exonerates Cardinal Woelki in financial investigation

Cardinal Woelki is a German prelate who served as the archbishop of Cologne from 2004 to 2021. The investigation was sparked by allegations of mismanagement of the archdiocese’s finances. The Holy See’s Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith (CDF) found no evidence of wrongdoing and cleared Woelki.

Pro-life groups plan next steps after opinion leak

WASHINGTON (CNS) — Although many pro-life groups immediately reacted positively to the news that the majority of Supreme Court justices seem set to overturn the court’s Roe v. Wade decision, some tempered their reaction with a continued call for more advocacy while others kept a wait-and-see approach until the court issues its opinion in the weeks ahead.

Some Catholic bishops likewise kept their response in check, but acknowledged the work done on the grassroots level by pro-life activists.

For example, hours after the draft of the court’s opinion was published by Politico May 2, San Francisco Archbishop Salvatore J. Cordileone tweeted: “Tonight I am thinking of all the years of hard work by pro-life people of all faiths and none. Years and years of patient advocacy, help for unwed moms, political engagement and more.”

The next day, the Archbishop of St. Paul and Minneapolis released a statement that Archbishop Bernard Hebda will comment when the Supreme Court releases its official statement. “No matter the court’s decision, the Catholic Church will continue to work toward building a culture of life and supporting women and their children,” the statement said.

Archbishop William E. Lori of Baltimore, chairman of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops’ Committee on Pro-Life Activities, said in a May 4 statement that the leaked opinion draft “reminds us of the urgent need for prayer and action at this pivotal moment in our country.”

“As we await the court’s decision, we urge everyone to intensify their prayer and fasting that the final decision of the court will bring about the reversal of Roe and Casey,” he said, referring to the court’s 1992 decision that affirmed Roe.

“We hope and pray for a change in our laws and stand ready to help all pregnant women in need in each of our communities,” he added.

National Right to Life, an advocacy group that has long fought against abortion, similarly said it “agrees with the statement of Mississippi Attorney General Lynn Fitch, who said, ‘We will let the Supreme Court speak for itself and wait for the Court’s official opinion.’”

Other groups were not so cautious. Texas Right to Life said it was encouraging news that “Roe soon may be gone. Yet new attacks on life will emerge.”

In its May 2 statement, the group called its supporters to further action saying: “Already, abortion advocates are calling on Congress to ban states from passing pro-life laws.”

“If and when the court overturns Roe, the pro-life movement must defeat attacks such as these and build a culture that values preborn children and pregnant mothers.”

Kristan Hawkins, president of Students for Life of America, likened the potential overturning of Roe v. Wade as the beginning for the antiabortion movement.

The previous day, her group sent a letter to all the Republican members of Congress urging them to back a nationwide “heartbeat bill,” banning abortions at six weeks of pregnancy. Hawkins, and nine other antiabortion leaders, emphasized that the 15-week ban at stake in the Dobbs v. Jackson Women’s Health Organization case before the court did not go far enough.

“If we are not focusing on limiting early abortions, we are not really addressing the violence of abortion at all,” Hawkins wrote in the letter.

After the court’s draft decision was leaked, she told The Washington Post: "We are on the precipice of a whole new America."

One thing many groups said they were not happy with was that the opinion was leaked to a news outlet.

Dennis Poust, executive director of the New York State Catholic Conference, said the leak was a breach of trust and "an attack on the integrity of the Judicial Branch of government.

"When our highest court cannot operate free of political interference or intimidation, it serves as a stark example that nothing is sacred anymore. While we fervently pray for legal protections of unborn children, we will not dignify the goals of the leader by commenting on the contents of the draft document."

The California Catholic Conference said in a May 3 statement that the leak of the opinion draft “triggered the governor and California legislative leadership to announce its intent to create a California constitutional amendment to protect the right to abortion. This will destroy lives, families and significantly limit the ability of the Catholic Church in California to protect the unborn.”
SCRIPTURE REFLECTIONS

Focusing on Christ’s love

This Fifth Sunday of Easter focuses on love – Christ’s love for us, the love among the apostles in response to Christ’s command that they love one another as He loved them, and finally the love found in the New Jerusalem, as the final flowering of love at the end of time.

Today’s Gospel is part of the Farewell address of Jesus at the Last Supper. He speaks movingly of the glory they will all share with Him if they imitate His love.

“I will give you a new commandment: love one another. As I have loved you, so you also should love one another. This is how all will know that you are my disciples.”

The first reading today gives us a glimpse of that love in action in the preaching of the Apostles. When Paul and Barnabas are anointed to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, their love for the Lord and each other is very visible to all who listened to them. And when Paul and Barnabas came to Lystra where he had been previously stoned, dragged out of the city and left for dead, only love and zeal for the Gospel could have given him the courage. How moved the new converts were when they observed his love for the very people who had tried to kill him!

The power of love gave them strength to endure much suffering for the sake of the Gospel. We see that same love in many of our missionary priests, nuns, and lay persons. The ability to endure imprisonment, torture, and extreme physical conditions comes from that same love for the Gospel and the people to whom they have been sent. We, too, must ask ourselves how much we are willing to give of ourselves in witness to the Gospel.

May all the fear, division, and violence of Covid, politics, and in the nations be overcome by God’s love working in us and through us.

CALLED TO SERVE

We don’t do it that way in my church

The Chosen is a TV series that, in the words of an anonymous reviewer, “fills in the colors of the bare outline given in the Biblical accounts” of Jesus, his disciples and life in the world Jesus found when he became human. It has been a terrific production that is about to air its third season.

I have particularly enjoyed the development of the personalities, the men and women who are the closest to Jesus during his public ministry and how they worked through their unique prejudices, habits and opinions.

All groups of individuals encounter challenges as they mature. Each crop of new members to a group brings preconceptions about how things ought to be done or what direction the group should follow. And then there is the chief executive officer. The woman or man in charge, call him president or CEO or chairperson or whatever who, by action or directive, steers the thinking and practices of the group.

Jesus was the CEO of the apostles. When he was absent from their gatherings, the apostles speculated, planned, connived all sorts of things about how they should or shouldn’t act in a given situation. When Jesus was in their company, what he said was gospel, even if they did not fully understand what he said or what he was teaching.

Recently I was privileged to join the deacons who were ordained last October for a six-month later reunion. That group made me smile as they talked about their post ordination experiences as deacons in parishes where they minister.

For the most part, in the first session, we talked about their experiences under the direction of their pastor. No one complained about his situation. It was clear each pastor, the CEO of the local organization, has his own style, his own mode of behavior or way of thought that is peculiar to him.

I recall that for years, probably before deacons came on the scene in the 1970s in our diocese, the lay reader, the lector, would read the prayers of the faithful after the Creed at Mass in my parish. One day I mentioned to my pastor at the time that the general instructions for the Mass say the Universal Prayers “are announced from the ambo or from another suitable place, by the Deacon.” If there is no deacon, then the prayers are said by a cantor, a reader or one of the lay faithful. We instituted the instruction soon after.

Sometimes in my travels people will say, “well the deacon in my church” does this or doesn’t do that at Mass. My usual response is, “that’s pastoral prerogative” meaning the deacon does whatever the pastor or celebrant priest told him to do, or not do.

Actually, when it comes to assisting at Mass, there are practices in the general instruction that some priests interpret to suit their mindset. That’s why I remember so well the phrase delivered by one of my instructors during deacon formation, “We will teach you how you should do it (assist at Mass for example) but once ordained you’ll do what your pastor tells you.”

In fairness, some deacons don’t have the rituals right either and introduce their own idiosyncrasies. Some of us give our pastors heartburn.

We are just imperfect people, all of us. That’s what led to the spirited conversation with the newly ordained deacons at Wadhams Hall and probably what led to the debates around the nighttime fire among the disciples in Jesus’ day. Alleluia!

Deacon Kevin Mastellon ministers in Watertown. He is the Director of Permanent Deacons for the Diocese of Ogdensburg.
NEW YORK (CNS) — The award for the most appropriate film title of 2022 goes to "Doctor Strange in the Multiverse of Madness" (Disney). Truly, this is a maddening, multidimensional, decidedly strange, yet typically "Marvel"-ous movie based on the comic book series.

Taken at face value, this is your basic popcorn film, designed as grand escapist entertainment. Director Sam Raimi, who helmed the popular Spider-Man film trilogy starring Tobey Maguire, checks all the requisite boxes as the action unfolds at a furious pace with eye-popping special effects.

Parents are advised that the violence, though stylized, is intense and sometimes gory, and the language occasionally salty, meaning younger Marvel fans should stick to the comics. Viewers unfamiliar with the Marvel canon and the interconnectivity of characters and plots will be hopelessly lost as the story, written by Michael Waldron, skips across said multiverse, alternative realities featuring familiar faces (and a boatload of cameos from previous Marvel films).

For the uninitiated, Dr. Stephen Strange (Benedict Cumberbatch), introduced in the eponymous 2016 film, is a neurosurgeon turned grand wizard, having been trained in the dark arts and the manipulation of the astral plane by the supreme sorcerer (and sidekick) Wong (Benedict Wong).

When we last saw the good doctor, he helped Peter Parker (Tom Holland) open the door to another dimension in the recent blockbuster "Spider-Man: No Way Home." Old habits die hard, as quickly revealed in "Multiverse of Madness." But first there is a wedding: Strange’s ex-fiancee, Christine Palmer (Rachel McAdams), is getting hitched. The former lovers pledge mutual respect and happiness before a gigantic octopus descends, a la King Kong, on Manhattan.

Ah, but this is no ordinary cephalopod. It’s from another universe, and before it is vanquished by Strange and Wong, disgorges a hostage: a young woman named America Chavez (Xochitl Gomez). She has a special gift: the ability to travel at will through the multiverse. That means all the baddies are after her, including versions of Strange in other dimensions.

Among these is a familiar face: Wanda Maximoff (Elizabeth Olsen), also known as the Scarlet Witch. She intends on using Chavez to take her power and travel to another universe where she can, surprisingly, live out her life as a single mother to two moppets, Billy (Julian Hilliard) and Tommy (Jeff Klyne).

But Marvel films are rarely so pro-family, and the wicked witch’s dream would wreak havoc across all universes. A titanic battle ensues halfway across the world between the forces of good (Strange) and evil (Maximoff), with Chavez as the prize.

Needless to say, the unexpected occurs, portals are opened and doppelgangers appear in droves. Strange comes face-to-face with a group of superheroes called the Illuminati, who may or may not be the next generation of Avengers.

"Multiverse of Madness" is awash in silliness and mumbo-jumbo, mixing sorcery, the occult and religious imagery. Sensible viewers will not take this seriously, but impressionable ones may need guidance that this is all harmless make-believe.

The film contains pervasive occult dialogue and action, some stylized violence, fleeting gory images and a handful of crude and profane terms. The Catholic News Service classification is A-III – adults.

The Motion Picture Association rating is PG-13 – parents strongly cautioned.

Some material may be inappropriate for children under 13.
An icon of St. Joseph holding the Child Jesus is the centerpiece of this year’s Knights of Columbus Pilgrim Icon Program.

Bishop Terry LaValley, chaplain of the Knights in the Diocese of Ogdensburg, launched the icon’s circulation throughout the diocese with a prayer service and rosary procession at the Sisters of St. Joseph Motherhouse in Watertown on May 1, the feast of St. Joseph the Worker.

Bishop LaValley led an outdoor prayer service at the statue of St. Joseph before the icon was processed up Washington Street to the High School and back while the rosary was said. Those unable to join the procession prayed the rosary while seated in front of the statue.

After the procession, the service ended with the Litany to St. Joseph.

The icon resided in the Motherhouse Chapel for a week before being circulated in Jefferson County and then throughout the diocese.

James Gayne from Dexter Council 7598 and New York 105 District deputy served a lector during the icon dedication.

Charles Robinson of Norfolk Council 11544, secretary/treasurer of the Bishop Brzana Chapter and former state secretary and state warden of the New York State Knights of Columbus Council discusses the icon of St. Joseph and the Child Jesus while Father John M. ‘Mickey’ Demo, pastor of Blessed Sacrament Parish in Watertown, looks on.

Memories of mission trip

Father Daniel Chapin has been serving as a priest associate of the Maryknoll Fathers and Brothers for the past six years, five in Cochabamba, Bolivia, and currently in Lima, Peru. He is accompanying the Parish Missionary Sisters of the Infant Jesus of Prague, the same community that served with the priests of the Ogdensburg Peruvian Apostolate in Mollendo. Father Chapin continues to share his account of his most recent trip in February the Parish of San Martin de Porres in Mollendo, as well as to Arequipa and to neighboring Equador.

I will continue the summary of my recent trip. I go almost daily to Mass at the local Vincentian parish, and on Sundays I preside at the Mass at the motherhouse of the Parish Missionary Sisters of the Infant Jesus of Prague, the group we whom we worked in Mollendo for many years (I was with them for my 10 years at San Martin).

The day following the tour of the parish with Father Gaspar, the Sosa family from Inclan [a local town] invited me to lunch at a country restaurant in the Tambo Valley. It is summer, so these kinds of places are popular, as meals are served outside, kind of a picnic environment.

It had been a long time since I had quality time with Señora Clara, her husband, her son and Sister Roxana, MP. Sister is a vocation out of Inclan. During my time in Mollendo, she was just a child; she was an adolescent when I left in 1986. She entered the community of the Missionary Sisters of the Infant Jesus of Prague due to the influence of the sisters and is now working in Estrecho/Iquitos/Loreto, in the Amazon with two other sisters of the MP, one of whom is Sister Isolina. Sister Isolina was in Mollendo during my time. It was great being with Sister Roxana and the family and then we took a quick trip to the family’s gas station in Matarami, a station they have owned there for decades.

Later in the afternoon, I visited one of our oldest friends, Sña. Haydéé de Salas, (Lucha’s elderly mother), who is in her home and being taken good care of by the family. We have known the Salas family since our earliest days in Matarami, where they lived and where our mission really began. The family has collaborated with us from the very beginning.

‘Octave of Service’ to be held May 19-26

To commemorate the 150th anniversary of our Diocese, parishes and Catholic organizations are invited and encouraged to participate in the Octave of Service from May 19th through May 26th. The Octave of Service is an opportunity to carry our various forms of outreach in their communities while living out the Gospel values of encounter and accompaniment, journeying together as disciples in mission.

MEANINGFUL SERVICE

Octave of Service projects should focus on supporting and improving your community as well as cultivating relationships with others, including through prayer. These opportunities could be new initiatives as well as initiatives with which your parish has already been involved.

Parishioners who are unable to join in person projects may be able to join as prayer support, or provide service behind the scenes from home.

EXPECTATIONS

While the Octave of Service is an eight-day event, parishes are not expected to carry out service every day of the week. At least one day of service, though, should be planned.

The following are possible schedules a parish can use throughout the week:
- One day of service with everyone participating in the same project.
- One day of service with different groups at various sites throughout the community.
- Multiple days of service with different groups participating in different projects.

Each day can be dedicated to a particular group or issue, whether it is through service or prayer, such as:
- May 19: Hunger and Homelessness
- May 20: Racial justice
- May 21: Addiction
- May 22: Youth
- May 23: Care for Creation
- May 24: Incarceration
- May 25: The Sick and Dying

OPPORTUNITY FOR COLLABORATION

The Octave of Service is a great opportunity for collaborative efforts among different groups, or even with those closest to you. Consider if the following groups offer feasible opportunities for partnership:
- Other parishes or churches in your area
- Community organizations such as food pantries and community resource centers
- Campus ministries or schools
- Within families

NECESSITY OF PRAYER

The Octave of Service allows us to put our Catholic faith into action, but any project or activity should be rooted in prayer and spiritual reflection. Consider including the following opportunities throughout your week of service:
- Starting and ending each service project in prayer or the daily readings.
- Including those that you are serving in your prayer service during the week for vulnerable populations.
- Asking the homebound and those who may not be able to participate in person, to pray for the project(s).

NOT A ONE-TIME EVENT

What follows from the Octave of Service is just as important as the week itself.

The Catholic Diocese of Ogdensburg’s commitment to walking with those in our communities who are most in need should, and must, continue long after the projects have concluded. Consider this week not as a one-time event, but as an opportunity for your parish to kickstart a growing effort of outreach and justice.

Diocese of Ogdensburg Family Life Office

Helping to build strong families with programs and activities that strengthen family life.

Don’t just pray for more priests and religious...pray for faithful, sacramental marriages, because that’s where vocations to the priesthood and religious life come from.

Do you want to:
- Build a marriage that has a less than 3 percent chance of ending in divorce?
- Learn how you can strengthen your marriage and your family?
- Know why families fall apart and what you can do to prevent this?
- Benefit from a network of support with other faithful families in this diocese?

If the answer to any of those questions is yes, contact:
