Pope: Desire for eternal youth is 'delusional'

VATICAN CITY (CNS) – The passing of time in one's life is meant to be lived as a God-given grace and not a meaningless pursuit to preserve one's youthfulness, Pope Francis said.

Men and women are "apprentices of life" who amid trials and tribulations "learn to appreciate God's gift, honoring the responsibility of sharing it and making it bear fruit for everyone," the pope said Aug. 10 during his weekly general audience.

"The conceit of stopping time – of wanting eternal youth, unlimited well-being, absolute power – is not only impossible, it is delusional," he said.

The pope continued his series of talks on old age and reflected on Jesus' farewell to his disciples during the Last Supper, in which he promised to "prepare a place" for them.

The time of life that remains for the disciples, the pope said, mirrors that of old age, which is "the fitting time for the moving and joyful witness of expectation" for one's true destination: "a place at the table with God, in the world of God."

Old age, he continued, should not be lived "in the dejection of missed opportunities" but in seeing that "the time of aging that God grants us is already in itself" one of God's great works.

"Our life is not made to be wrapped up in itself, in an imaginary earthly perfection," the pope said. "It is destined to go beyond, through the passage of death – because death is a passage. Indeed, our stable place, our destination is not here, it is beside the Lord, where he dwells forever."
It was a banner day

As my husband, my son and I worked our way through the different stations of Camp Guggenheim registration, I noticed it.

It was one of the banners affixed to the ceiling of “The Inn” at camp, the building where registration was taking place. The banners are from previous years of camp. Most of them bear images reflecting previous camp themes and the names of campers, counselors and guests who attended those years, signed in black permanent marker. It was the only banner that didn’t have a year/date marked on it. It looked familiar. As we waited for our turn at the next station in registration, I scanned the banner until I saw a familiar signature, “Darcy Smith,” my signature, scrawled to the left of Olympic rings shaped into hearts. I snapped a photo of the banner. I can tell you with some certainty that it should be dated 1996 (I’m dating myself with that), the year I attended Camp Guggenheim.

Later, I posted my photo of that banner on social media and “tagged” people from my friends list whose names were on the banner. Father Martin E. Cline’s name was there, but it was regular Martin Cline then. I saw a signature belonging to the diocesan chancellor, Deacon James Crowley. I also saw the names of many of my childhood friends.

One of the people I tagged in the photo post later sent me a private message, and we reminisced about our time together at Camp and times we shared faith and fellowship after meeting each other at camp. Catching up with that old friend warmed my heart.

I have to believe it was not just coincidence that I saw that banner in such close proximity to this edition, when we’re celebrating both our diocesan anniversary/history and taking a look at Camp Guggenheim.

That banner and subsequent conversations related to it reminded me how important it can be to look back and remember our past. It reminded me how significant the places of faith – our parishes, schools, Camp Guggenheim - are in creating lasting impressions and changing lives. It reminded me how amazing it is that my son gets to experience that in his life, too, all these years later.

It was worth noticing.

Words from our first bishop

I found it. I knew I had it. It’s a little book that would give me a glimpse of those early days of the Diocese of Ogdensburg when it was formed as a Roman Catholic Diocese 150 years ago. The book is entitled, “Reminiscences of Edgar P. Wadhams, the First Bishop of Ogdensburg,” written by C.A. Walworth. So, today, I want to share a little with you about our first Bishop and those early days of our diocese as we celebrate our 150th Anniversary.

Edgar P. Wadhams was born in Lewis, New York. Today, there is a plaque on the road near the house. As a young man he entered an Episcopalian seminary. Later, he was ordained a deacon, and he ministered at Ticonderoga. He was to convert to the Roman Catholic Church. He entered the Catholic Sulpician Seminary of St. Mary’s, in Baltimore, Maryland (the very same seminary where I studied). He was ordained a Catholic priest on January 15, 1850, at St. Mary’s Cathedral in Albany by Bishop McCloskey.

Later, he became rector of the Cathedral Church and then Vicar-General of the diocese.

It was in 1871 that a decision was made to separate the Diocese of Ogdensburg from the Diocese of Albany. The new diocese was to consist of the Adirondack Region as well as the region to the north and west. Two cities in this area with sufficient population were Plattsburgh and Ogdensburg. Ogdensburg was the one chosen as the See city, the place for the Diocesan Cathedral. Chosen to be the first bishop was Father Edgar P. Wadhams.

Father Wadhams was consecrated a bishop by Archbishop McCloskey on May 5, 1872. At his consecration as bishop and his appointment as the First Bishop of Ogdensburg, a priest friend of Bishop Wadhams preached the homily. I want to share some of his homily with you. Remember this was 150 years ago. He spoke: “Go forth then, man of God, where God and duty call thee! Be thou the Apostle of the American Highlands, and of that broad and noble plain whose borders are a majestic lake, a mighty river, an inland ocean, and the primeval mountains. Go plant the cross of Christ among the native hills; unfurl the Catholic banner on the banks of the St. Lawrence and on the shores of Ontario and Lake Champlain.

He then adds, “that our new Bishop will find new friends – in this new mission – yet there will be none to love thee better, none truer than those thou leastest now in tears and sadness behind thee.”

“I do want to add quotes that the author remembers that were made by Bishop Wadhams as he looked forward to coming to his new diocese. We are given a glimpse of Bishop Wadhams’ spirit and determination. Here he is speaking to a friend, a Professor Carmody, “I know, Carmody, the task I have before me. I know the country well. The population is poor and scattered. It is a land of small settlements and long distances. The people cannot be reached by railways or stagecoaches. Even good wagon roads are few. But I’ll tell you what I mean to do. I shall get a good pony that will carry me anywhere; and you take my word for it, it will not be long before I visit every family; every man and woman, barefoot boy and yellow haired girl in my diocese will know me. Yes, Sir!”

Another quote was passed along by Bishop Lidden of Syracuse. Someone had asked Bishop Wadhams how he could leave the busy life in the city of Albany to go to the North Country. Bishop Wadhams responded, “My friend, I love those Adirondacks, I love those mountains, those streams and rivers, I love all that there is in that territory.”
Celebrating 150 years

Editor’s note: The following is Bishop Terry R. LaValley’s homily from the 150th Anniversary Mass celebrated Aug. 10, the Feast of St. Lawrence, in St. Mar’s Cathedral.

Prior to erection as a diocese, the North Country’s spiritual welfare was provided by several Churches, churches across the St. Lawrence River as well as from the other side of the Atlantic, and by the Church of New York, and then Albany. I use that phrase, the North Country, cautiously, because there is beautiful land and people North of the North Country, like Kingston, Ottawa/Cornwall and Valleyfield.

Bishop DuBois of New York made his first visit to this most wooded part of his diocese, to St. Regis and Waddington, back in 1827. Historians tell us that in the 1830's and 40's missionary priests from New York “gave the best part of their lives to the severe conditions and labored in the wilderness of the North Country.”

We are indebted to all those early missionaries, those devoted daughters and sons of the Church who brought the Eucharist, the sacraments and Catholic education, who cared so deeply for the poor and the orphaned—all so committed to the folks of this rugged land so long ago. The seed of faith was sown and nurtured.

One writer observed that these missionaries “carried to their work a buoyancy, a sacrificial stance and cheerfulness that only deep faith could supply.” He commented that their common virtues were such that “they desired to safeguard the faith and honor of their people.” Sisters and brothers, in this local Church’s history, where that honor was denied and human dignity stolen, we express our sorrow and seek the Lord’s forgiveness.

On February 16, 1872, Pope Pius IX wrote: We, with definite knowledge, mature deliberation, and by our Apostolic Authority, in virtue of the present document, separate and sever from the Diocese of Albany, the following territory—the counties of St. Lawrence, Franklin, Clinton, Jefferson, Lewis, and Essex, together with that part of the counties of Herkimer and Hamilton which lies above the northern line of the townships of Ohio and Russia; and this same territory we erect and constitute as a true and properly called diocese. And so, the Diocese of Ogdensburg was born!

“Unless a grain of wheat falls to the ground and dies, it remains just a grain of wheat; but if it falls to the ground and dies, it bears much fruit.”

dies, it produces much fruit." For generations, that fruitful martyr, St. Lawrence, has had a special place in our hearts. The river which claims his name, has brought untold numbers from foreign lands to settle here. It continues to serve as an important route for commerce and recreation.

You know his story. Lawrence was "first among the deacons who served the cathedral church in Rome." This was a position of great trust that included the care of the treasury and riches of the Church. Lawrence was tasked with the distribution of alms to the poor. After the execution of Pope Sixtus II, the Roman civil authorities demanded that Lawrence turn over the riches of the Church. Lawrence faced three days in solitary confinement before the prefect, and when ordered to deliver the treasures of the Church, he presented the poor and the suffering. He worked quickly to distribute as much Church property to the poor as possible, to prevent it from being seized by the prefect.

On the third day, as the head of a small delegation, Lawrence came before the prefect, and when ordered to deliver the treasures of the Church he presented the poor and the suffering. He insisted that these were the true treasures of the Church.

The prefect was so angry that he had a big gridiron prepared with hot coals beneath it and had Lawrence placed on it. As you look at the sculptural work on the exterior of St. Mary's Cathedral, you'll see a depiction of St. Lawrence with the gridiron. His act of defiance led to his martyrdom. The grain of wheat fell.

Our first shepherd, Bishop Wadhams, gave all. He sowed God's Word and followed Christ in the most severe of conditions. Cardinal Dolan is using Bishop Wadhams's original pastoral staff at this special Mass. St. Lawrence's deep faith, love for the poor, and courage are telling attributes of our first shepherd. Jesus told His disciples: Whoever serves me must follow me. And that, the bishop did.

What was in store for Bishop Wadhams? One chronicler wrote: "The Ogdensburg mission is the wildest part of the state, and the stories that could be told of endurance and suffering in it are as real and interesting as any from the remote West. I attended him once on a visitation to a county up there. The parish visited lay in a region well scoured by the winds of Lake Ontario. We travelled seven miles from the railroad to the parish town the first night, and seven more in the morning to another mission...The Bishop said Mass, preached, confirmed and went through the ceremony of dedication in a half-finished church.

The writer goes on: "After a breakfast of poor coffee, a tough steak, soggy bread, and doughnuts, we rode back to the parish town, where the bishop preached and confirmed in the town hall and talked of his day with the natives about politics and crops.

At six o'clock Monday morning the ride to the depot was repeated, and the bishop got home by noon to recover from dyspepsia and rheumatism, the consequence of official visits to the mountains. Such a rigorous life was hard upon the priests and the religious laboring in the diocese. Most of them were poor, unable to receive much more than mere sustenance from equally hard working and poor parishioners.

Being a local boy, as was Bishop Wadhams, at my Episcopal ordination, I shared these words that he had written: "I know well the task I have before me. I know that country well. The population is poor and scattered. It is a land of small settlements and long distances. The people cannot be reached by railroads or stagecoaches. Even good wagon roads are few. But I'll tell you what I mean to do."

I shall get a good pony that will carry me anywhere; and you take my word for it, it will not be long before I visit every family; and every man and woman, barefooted boy, and yellow-headed girl in my diocese will know me. Yes, sir-ee," he wrote.

As you know, as part of our diocesan Envisioning Process, we sought to visit every household in our diocese, most often on wheels, rather than by hoof. Yes, sir-ee!

Within his first month here, Bishop Wadhams had begun to insist on the practice of announcing the Incarnation. In one village, the pastor complained to the new bishop that he was too poor to ring the Angelus because he had to serve as his own sacristan and when away at the out missions, there was no one to care for the church. "What!" the bishop exclaimed, "too poor to ring the Angelus?"

He quickly called in the cook, Margaret, and promised her two dollars a month extra if she would accept the responsibility of ringing the bells and that she did! Bishop Wadhams set church bells pealing out the Angelus three times daily in whatever village he visited. From the very start, the people of this local Church have turned to the Blessed Virgin as our Patroness and Maternal help.

For the last 150 years, the Diocese of Ogden- burg has been blessed with the ministry of so many faithful consecrated religious, priests, deacons, bishops, and devoted lay faithful. Through the guidance of God's Holy Spirit, they have seen us through World Wars, the Great Depression, a sexual revolution, the introduction of the Internet & cell phones, terrorist attacks, heinous sins against our youth, and through the Pandemic. Through it all, like the flowing streams tucked in the valleys flowing between our mountains, the grace of God continues to flow in the lives of the folks who call the North Country "home."

It's no secret that with the disappearance of the family farm, to this day, we encounter certain significant challenges. But there's nothing, nothing that can't be accomplished with strong faith and sacrifice.

That missionary spirit which introduced the faith to the native population here back in the 18th and 19th centuries took a new turn, generations later, when Bishop Brzana, in response to the teachings of Vatican Council II, sent priests of the North Country as missionaries to Peru, South America. Our continuing supportive relationship with the Diocese of Mollendo and with Bishop Chbeir and the faithful of Latakia, Syria help safeguard the Catholic faith and honor the people, far beyond our borders.

My sisters and brothers, over forty years ago, the world witnessed the "Miracle on Ice" at the Winter Olympics in Lake Placid. Truth be told, miracles are not so rare. Raw faith has the power to change everything! Through the power of God's Spirit, the faith continues to thrive in this local Church because of the early pioneers of the Church who trekked the trails, rafted the rivers and rode the rails to share the Good News of what our God has done and continues to do for us, here in the North Country.

Yes, we remember the sacrifices experienced so that the faith might increase.

Yes, we renew our commitment to follow Jesus and build up His Body, the Church. Yes, at every Mass, we celebrate the love poured out upon us by the Lord.

We proclaim "YES!" because that early missionary spirit continues to cover the land and is planted into the hearts of our folks. You carry to your neighbor a certain buoyancy, a sacrificial stance and a cheerfulness that only your deep faith can supply and sustain.

In 1732, the first recorded Mass within the territory of our Diocese was celebrated in Crown Point. 290 years later we gather at Eucharist and continue to do what folks up here have done faithfully since that time, because, after all, we are Christ-led, Christ-fed and Hope-filled. Yes, sir-ee! We are disciples in mission! May God be praised...forever may God be praised!
New priest in Watertown: ‘Be true to your heart’

By Mary Beth Bracy
Contributing Writer

WATERTOWN — Father Kiaieta Joseph Kanimea, MSC, new parochial vicar at Our Lady of the Sacred Heart (OLSH) in Watertown, was born and raised in Fiji (South Pacific). One of his first impressions when arriving in Watertown in December 2021 was regarding the weather.

"After a few days here in Watertown, the cold temperature was below 0 for a few weeks," he said. "It was far from that cold in Nazareth, Pennsylvania, where I worked from 2012 to 2018. After a few weeks of experiencing the 0 temperature, I said to myself, Gosh, Fiji is so warm at this time. What in the heck am I doing here? It was my first experience of the cold weather here in Watertown. Living in (Pennsylvania) for nine years, I thought I can endure the cold here. I came to realize that it was a different ballgame of cold, baby! Imagine my relief when it came, and I said to myself, this is what God wants me to do – to become a priest," he said.

A week later he heard back from the government offering him a scholarship for civil engineering.

"But I promised Our Lady whatever the first letter came would be the way to follow in my life," he said. "I did not look back and I joined the MSC." He remains devoted to Our Lady of the Sacred Heart and offers a novena sometimes.

In 1993, Father Kanimea professed his vows and began his seminary studies. He was ordained on January 27, 2001. Then, he served for a few years in small Pacific islands like Samoa and Nauru, but mostly at a parish in Fiji and the MSC formation house for the scholastics. He also studied at the Pacific Regional Seminary, for the diocese of the South Pacific. From 2004-07, Father Kanimea went to the Philippines to take mission courses. He majored in formation at Santo Tomas, concentrating on programs, history of consecrated life, theology, and canon law to go back home and help seminarians.

Lesson from a heron

Those of you who have been privileged to spot a blue heron and taken time to observe one of its habits know that it can sit still for a VERY long time. Its enduring patience is motivated by its need to be feed and nourished for the day. During these lovely days of summer do you ever felt drawn to sit and hear this sweet song of creation, and its call for healing. For complete text, see Message of His Holiness Pope Francis for the Celebration of the World Day of Prayer for the Care of Creation.

Father Kanimea

“I only knew about USA from my classes and movies,” he said. “We would talk about how big and powerful the USA is. Those things made me scared to come, but I found out it is just like any other country. The USA needs more about God, so I'm happy to share my priesthood.”

Father Kanimea was close to his grandparents, and, at one time, his grandfather wanted to become a priest.

“My grandparents are really the ones who taught me how to pray,” he said. “My grandmother taught me to pray the Rosary. It was the best prayer that I've known in my life, and I pray the Rosary now. It made a big difference in my life. In elementary school, we started to pray the Rosary every night. The Holy Spirit was already working in me and, at the end of high school, I was already thinking of joining the priesthood.”

He was educated by Marist brothers and considered joining them, but it was not his call. MSC run the parishes in Fiji, and it was in his heart to join them.

Speaking about his vocations, Father Kanimea reflected on the joy that priestly service brings him.

“When I was in Philippines I went with other priests to where they dumped all of the trash in all of Manila,” he said. “I couldn’t believe what was in front of us. They would throw the trash on the side of the road. They open whatever they can and eat it for their meal. There are more people that are poorer than me. It changed my personality to not complain.”

When he isn’t busy serving God’s people, Father Kanimea enjoys sports.

“Now I go fishing,” he said. “I love people. I love to play rugby.”

When he came to the USA, Father Kanimea taught himself the rules of American football and enjoys watching it with Father John “Mickey” Demo.

Father Kanimea offered this advice for those discerning vocations:

“Be true to your heart, God will talk to you, do not be afraid. It’s a beautiful life, being available to the need of the Church. Please continue to pray for priests and for religious life, nuns and brothers, that vocations will come.”

“It was a good experience to work along with them,” he said. “I taught one-week courses on various topics of religious life.”

His arrival to America was filled with surprises.

Rest in Peace

Laughter, praise return to Camp Guggenheim

By Darcy Fargo
Editor

SARANAC LAKE – After camp was shuttered for two summers due to the pandemic, hiking, singing and praising returned to the shores of the Lower Saranac Lake as Camp Guggenheim returned for the 2022 summer season.

Four sessions of camp were run for youth ages 12-15, and a final session was run for youth ages 16-18.

As in previous years, campers rotate through four morning activities, Liturgy, Arts & Crafts, Project Adventure and Watertfront, and participate in a variety of evening events, including a dance, talent show, Reconciliation Service and more.

For Lexi Woodward, 14, of Plattsburgh, the return of camp gave her an opportunity to attend for the first time.

“My mother signed me up,” said Woodward a few days into her camp experience. “I wasn’t sure about it. I like it now.”

Woodward said she was enjoying the total camp experience, but a few activities stood out as favorites.

“I like being with everyone and meeting and seeing different people,” she said. “And I love Watertfront and the beach.”

When Woodward arrived at camp, she wasn’t sure she would know any of the other campers. While she happened to run into a couple of other youth she knew from growing up in the Malone area, she also enjoyed meeting new people.

“I made a lot of friends,” she said. “I like that.”

Coleman McCallen of Springfield, Pennsylvania, said that while his family has historically attended Camp Guggenheim, it was his first time attending.

“All of my uncles and siblings went here,” he said, noting his family has ties to the area. “I came with my cousins and brothers, but I also made some new friends.”

McCallen said he especially enjoyed Camp Olympics and time around the camp bonfire.

While the Camp Guggenheim experience is enjoyed by the camp attendees, camp staff say they also find the experience meaningful.

“I camp to camp as a camper,” said Hannah Laneuville, 22, of Massena. “I always wanted to be a counselor. After COVID cancelled camp for two summers, I figured this would be my chance to do it.”

Laneuville noted she’ll be teaching at St. Lawrence Central in the fall.

“I love meeting all the kids,” she said. “It’s great to hear their stories and see where they are with their faith. And it’s a lot of fun.”

While she noted the job isn’t a typical summer job, she’s glad to have had the experience.

“It’s long days, and a lot of work, but it’s worth it work, if that makes sense,” she said. “The kids really lift you up.”

Laneuville said she’s made life-long friends as both a camper and a camp staffer.

“I have called you by name; you are mine!” (Isaiah 43:1-5)

Has not God called us by name to be His loving heart for Him in return for His loving us from all eternity? This call is to accompany Jesus, to be with Him as we carry out His will. We have been baptized in His name, chosen, consecrated, signed with the Sign of the Cross and sealed by the anointing of the Holy Spirit to walk with our God. He longs for our hearts to actively live His life and love. It is the same call given to the disciples, “Come Follow Me.” “Come and see.” “I will make you fishers of people.” This call is a gift, a grace, a journey to enter into a relationship of love and service. This mission is to bring the Kingdom of God to its fullness, that is, justice, peace, righteousness, and love.

God keeps calling us every day, not once and for all, but each day to be His co-workers in the vineyard. The laborers are few, but the harvest is great. The laborers are not only few for the priesthood and consecrated life but also for those called to the married life. The call to be a faithful husband and wife – to be a father and mother in raising a family as the “domestic church” where a deep loving relationship with God begins – is a huge challenge in our society today. Without a strong, faith-filled and supporting family who lives and practices the faith, it is difficult to hear the call to marriage, priesthood or consecrated life.

The world needs a loving relationship with God. The Church needs YOU, not to leave the world, but to go out into the world and to bring the Good News, the Gospel message of hope to a despairing world that is in crisis. Saint John Paul II often shouted out to the young: “Do not be afraid!” The grace of God is there as He opens surprising ways of doing things for the People of God beyond our imagination. I can attest to this after 59 years of religious life. I have been graced by God beyond what I could have imagined that many years ago and I am so filled with joy and gratitude.

The Vocation Office, through the support of the Bishop’s Fund, has enabled this ministry to continue to go out to encourage, listen to, support and guide men and women to listen to the tiny whisperings of their heart, “Is God calling me in a particular way to serve Him as a priest, a permanent deacon, a religious sister or consecrated virgin?” The Bishop’s Fund theme: 150 Years: Together in Faith attests to the many vocations to the priesthood and religious life. Men and women have witnessed their faith in service to the needs of the diocese as priests, permanent deacons, consecrated religious men and women, and single individuals to bring the Good News to the people of the North Country for over 150 years.

Father Christopher C. Cararra, director of Vocations and Father Matthew Conger, assistant director of Vocations and I are encouraged by the number of seminarians we have studying for priesthood. We are presently blessed with nine seminarians who are in formation for priesthood. Lukas Gruber, a transitional deacon, will be ordained next year. Hopefully, we will have two seminarians who will be transitional deacons. One of the goals of the Vocation Office is to re-establish Discernment Groups in three locations in the diocese. The purpose of a discernment group is to provide an opportunity for young people to understand more deeply the life of a priest or sister and to know if one is being called to this way of life. Tyler Fitzgerald, a seminarian at St. Vincent’s Seminary, Latrobe, Pennsylvania acknowledged the support of the Bishop’s Fund for his education as a seminarian. He also noted that the discernment group that he participated in strengthened his call to priesthood and encouraged him to move forward. Parish and school vocation committees provide a variety of ways to foster and to encourage pastors, families, and educators an awareness of the call and need for vocations in their local community.

The Vocation Office, along with the Office of Youth Ministry, are planning fall Middle School Retreats in three regions: Plattsburgh, Watertown and Massena. These retreats focus on God’s universal call to holiness. School visits and parish catechetical centers are also part of reaching out to our young people and encouraging them to listen with their hearts. We invite them to see the hungry, the poor, the lonely and the forgotten and share with them that God needs their love to serve Him in a special way. The Vocation Office is grateful to the people of the North Country for their support of the Bishop’s Fund as it continues to provide programs and resources for the service of the Diocese.

To those discerning a call from God: it is the Holy Spirit that seeps into your heart; the feeling may be disturbing and can cause a racket within you. However, the Holy Spirit speaks with harmony and peace. Listen, pay attention, and let the Holy Spirit speak and do the work. Mary, Virgin and Mother, listened to the Spirit and spoke her fiat to the Angel Gabriel. Pray like her: “Behold I am the handmaid of the Lord. Be it done to me according to your Word” (Luke 1:38).
Catholic agencies: Inflation Act addresses goals

Landmark legislation to address climate change, reduce prescription drug costs and establish a minimum tax on large corporations once thought dead but was suddenly passed by the Senate is being hailed by Catholic advocates.

“It’s a minor miracle that it got passed,” Dan Misleh, founder of the Catholic Climate Covenant, said of the Inflation Reduction Act, which was approved 51-50 Aug. 7. Vice President Kamala Harris cast the deciding vote.

Misleh and his organization have long advocated for passage of the climate-related components of the renamed bill, a pared down version of President Joe Biden's original $2-trillion Build Back Better plan.

The bill includes $369 billion in funding for investments in clean energy, domestic manufacturing of batteries and solar panels, electric vehicle tax breaks and greenhouse gas reduction efforts.

Environmental advocates said such provisions will bring the U.S. closer to meeting its pledges to reduce carbon emissions under the Paris climate agreement. Taken together, the bill’s components are projected to reduce the country’s carbon emissions by 2035, the highest ever recorded.

The bill was expected to be approved by the Democrat-controlled House of Representatives Aug. 12 when it reconvenes for a one-day session in the middle of its summer recess.

The Catholic Climate Covenant staff and volunteers have urged passage of the legislation’s environment-related components in one form or another for months. A covenant-sponsored sign-on letter to members of Congress that calls for action on the climate garnered more than 300 institutional partners including parishes, religious congregations, dioceses, nonprofits and schools.

“We’re just delighted that the United States is back in the game (to address climate change) internationally and nationally,” Misleh told Catholic News Service Aug. 10.

Archbishop Paul S. Coakley of Oklahoma City, chairman of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops’ Committee on Domestic Justice and Human Development, also expressed support for the Senate vote.

He particularly cited the bill’s provisions tackling environmental concerns and lowering drug prices in an Aug. 9 statement. He also said it was “prudent” that the measure “contains revenue provisions to offset the investments when concerns around inflation and the economy are high.”

"Climate change is a global challenge that requires courageous, long-term action from Congress, and I am grateful for the many substantial climate provisions that bring the United States closer to honoring its emissions reductions goals under the Paris Agreement, which Pope Francis has strongly encouraged us to meet,” the archbishop said.

“I am also grateful for provisions in the bill that will lower prescription drug costs for those who rely on Medicare, and continue to call on lawmakers to ensure all health care policy respects the inherent dignity and right to life of every human being,” he added.

Misleh, a longtime environmental advocate, said the legislation’s support for renewable energy projects are designed to aid Catholic facility managers choose to add solar panels and energy-efficient equipment to their buildings.

“It’s going to make a lot of economic sense to do so,” Misleh said.

He also welcomed $60 billion for environmental justice priorities, including $15 billion for reducing carbon emissions and providing clean energy for low-income and disadvantaged communities.

The Inflation Reduction Act has undergone a metamorphosis in order to attract the votes of Democratic Sens. Joe Manchin of West Virginia and Kyrsten Sinema of Arizona. Republicans unanimously opposed the measure from the beginning.

Despite it being renamed in an effort to address the high inflation American families are facing, economic analysts have said the bill is unlikely to do little to either fuel or slow rising prices.

An analysis from the Penn Wharton Budget Model at the University of Pennsylvania estimates that act would cause inflation to rise “very slightly” through 2024 and then fall in later years.

It also would reduce cumulative federal deficits by $248 billion over the next decade, according to the analysis.

A summary from Senate Democrats projects the bill would reduce the federal deficit by about $300 billion.

While the bill still is largely focused on addressing environmental concerns, there are a wide range of provisions that would reach across the economy, including the health care sector.

Lisa Smith, vice president of advocacy and public policy, at the Catholic Health Association of the United States, said the bill would extend expanded subsidies for uninsured people to pay for health insurance under the Affordable Care Act through 2025.

Movies from 1922 available at no cost

NEW YORK (CNS) – By 1922, the film industry, which had begun to migrate from the East Coast to Hollywood about a decade earlier, was well-established and thriving. A century later, many of the movies released that year have perished. But some have survived while others have been rediscovered or restored.

Following, in alphabetical order, are capsule reviews of six notable features that have reached their centennial and are available to view for free online. Unless otherwise noted, the Catholic News Service classification for each is A-II – adults and adolescents. None have been rated by the Motion Picture Association.

"Beyond the Rocks"

Director Sam Wood's adaptation of Elinor Glyn's 1906 novel is notable as the only film to co-star screen legends Gloria Swanson and Rudolph Valentino. Swanson plays a Dorset country lass whose gentlemanly father (Alec B. Francis) is living in reduced circumstances. To help improve the family's fortunes, she reluctantly agrees to marry a middle-aged, nouveau-riche millionaire (Robert Bolder) though she's already drawn to Valentino in the guise of a young and dashing nobleman. The plot puts an interesting, altruistic spin on the perennial tale pitting love against duty, but the mood is rather overheated. Still, given that this romantic drama was considered lost for more than 90 years, it ranks as a recovered treasure. Mature themes, including potential adultery, are available to view as the only film to received a recovered treasure. Mature themes, including potential adultery, are available to view.

"Blood and Sand"

The idea of casting Rudolph Valentino as the bullfighter protagonist of Vicente Blasco Ibáñez's 1909 novel, here brought to the screen by director Fred Niblo, must have struck the folks at Paramount as money in the bank — and so it proved. The artistic value of the resulting film is a different question. So, too, is its staying power. Exotic atmospheres trump the slow-moving story as Valentino's swaggering but kindly toreador finds acclaim in the ring and domestic happiness with his childhood sweetheart (Lila Lee), only to have his professional success as well as his personal tranquility threatened by the wiles of an amoral noblewoman (Nita Naldi). Those willing to excuse the hypotetical tone of the stodgy intertitles — which condemn both the dangerous cruelty to animals and the marital infidelity on which the picture itself otherwise thrives — can take this as an idyll in the sunny Spain of old. Implied adultery and marital sensuality. https://archive.org/details/BLOODANDSAND1922RudolphValentinoNitaNaldiLilaLee

"Dr. Mabuse the Gambler"

The contest between the master criminal of the title (Rudolf Klein-Rogge) and the state prosecutor (Bernhard Goetzke) who's on his trail becomes the centerpiece of this sprawling, four-hour panorama of German society in the heyday of the Weimar Republic. There's also a Gothic tinge to director and co-writer Fritz Lang's adaptation of a novel by Norbert Jacques since the villain uses hypnotism to control some of his victims. Indeed, his haunting eyes are a sight that can't be unseen. Viewers of stamina will be rewarded with a richly textured experience, though it's an unsuitable one for kids. Possibly acceptable for older teens. Stylized gunplay, occult activity, drug use, implied cohabitation, a few profanities, a couple of crude expressions. The Catholic News Service classification is A-III — adults. https://archive.org/details/Dr.MabuseTheGamblerDr.MabuseDerSpieler1922Part1

"Flesh and Blood"

Not even the formidably talented of Lon Chaney can save this sappy melodrama in which he plays a wrongly convicted prison escapee whose plan to wreak vengeance on the businessman who framed him (Ralph Lewis) is complicated by his virtuous daughter's (Edith Roberts) love for his nemesis' son (Jack Mulhall). Chaney's fugitive takes shelter in an unnamed city's Chinatown, which is depicted as at once exotic and sinister, its darker side presided over by a painfully caricatured gang leader (Noah Beery). Throw in the fact that the young heroine works in a slum mission and that she's sent into raptures of melancholy by her unknown father's performance of "Love's Old Sweet Song" on his fiddle and the hopelessly dated nature of the proceedings, helmed by Irving Cummings, becomes all too apparent. Ethnic stereotypes to order yours today! https://archive.org/details/FleshAndBlood1922

"Foolish Wives"

Erich von Stroheim wrote, directed and starred in this lavish drama in which he plays a swindler and serial seducer posing as a Russian count in Monte Carlo. Plotting with two accomplices pretending to be his equally aristocratic cousins (Maude George and Mae Busch), he sets his sights on the naive wife (Patricia Hannon, credited as Miss DuPont) of an American diplomat (Rudolph Christians) intending first to compromise her and then extort money from her. The fact that he also targets an underage, mentally disabled girl (Malvina Polo) demonstrates that, while in some respects tame by today's standards, this Carl Laemmle production, supervised by a youthful Irving Thalberg, retains its lurid tint. Catholic viewers will nonetheless appreciate the providential turn of events by which one of the wicked protagonist's schemes is foiled. Said to be the first movie with a $1 million budget, its elaborate visual spectacle is accompanied by a score from operetta composer Sigmund Romberg. Possibly acceptable for older adolescents. Mature themes, including potential sexual abuse and adultery. The Catholic News Service classification is A-III — adults. https://archive.org/details/FoolishWives1922_201704

"Nosferatu"

Horror classic loosely based on Bram Stoker's novel "Dracula" centers on the vampire count (Max Schreck) who leaves his sinister castle in the Carpathian Mountains to sail on a doomed ship bringing him to 1838 Bremen where his dark deeds are undone by a brave young woman and the first light of dawn. Directed by F.W. Murnau, the German production is most notable for its eerie portrayal of the vampire in images which seem to personify evil and dread in a movie even more remarkable for having been filmed mostly on location rather than in the controlled confines of a studio. Stylized violence and menace. https://archive.org/details/Nosferatu1922VHS
Many years ago, I remember teaching a play to students in the seminary about some “righteous” people who had died and been admitted into heaven. To their dismay they spotted many people they never expected to find there, people they did not think worthy of heaven. Because these righteous were guilty of pride and anger at the sight, they found themselves tumbling down to hell!

I thought of that story while reading Scriptures for this Sunday. In St. Luke’s gospel, someone asks Jesus “Lord, will only a few people be saved?” Then Jesus speaks of the difficulties in entering heaven, even for the chosen people. Many of the righteous will be rejected for their pride and will be surprised to see many others from the east and west, north and south will recline at the table in the kingdom of God. He closes his discourse with the comment, “for behold, some who are last will be first, and some who are first will be last.”

Jesus words are puzzling. How can we possibly know if we’re on the right track, and if we’re really going through that narrow gate? We need to pay close attention to today’s second reading from Hebrews. The writer tells us not to disdain the discipline of the Lord or lose heart, for they come from the loving hand of the father who is testing us." For what ‘son’ is there whom his father does not discipline?” The Lord’s discipline makes us truly righteous and should be a cause for joy.

When we were in school, we didn't necessarily like the word “discipline.” It meant writing something 500 times or staying after school. But discipline really means self-control. Unless we can control our emotions, our appetites, or our appetites, we can get ourselves into a lot of trouble. We can say things or do things that we will bitterly regret. We can lose friends that way. Undisciplined behavior over a period of time can lose a spouse or even lose heaven.

The Christian life entails a lot of discipline, but it helps us grow into the kind of person God wants us to be. Today’s second reading gives us wonderful encouragement in the words, “so strengthen your drooping hands and your weak knees. Make straight paths for your feet.” The Christian life is not for sissies!

The lesson for us today is clear; in humility, discipline, and openness, we must work our way through the narrow door that leads to life.

Celebrating the diocese and St. Lawrence

Months ago, I asked someone at the Chancery if August 10, the feast of St. Lawrence, was chosen randomly or was the date selected as fitting. I remember being told the date was coincidence.

As Jethro says on NCIS, “there’s no such thing as coincidence.”

I am willing to bet the Holy Spirit had something to do with the selection. The feast of Deacon Lawrence happened to fit with everyone’s schedule, from Cardinal Timothy Dolan, the principal celebrant, to all the bishops that gathered at St. Mary’s Cathedral last week to celebrate a significant date in the life of the church in New York.

The event fit the schedules of all sorts of Catholic religious and lay people who travelled to St. Mary’s Cathedral in Ogdensburg on that feast day. It brought local political figures and clergy from other denominations.

It brought those in the cathedral and those who watched the ceremony from afar via the streamed link together to celebrate the past and look forward.

A homily I read for this feast said, “Lawrence was a receiver of divine blessing of holy strength – so us, we are always receivers before God. It is from this receiving that we are graced to give and give freely, graciously, generously.”

The history of the diocese demonstrates the love Catholics in the North Country of New York had for each other and for everyone who called this “wilderness” home.

Pope Pius IX erected the diocese in 1872 and appointed Edgar P. Wadhams to “assume charge of the new see.” Wadhams became the first Bishop of the Diocese of Ogdensburg. It seemed appropriate at his installation Mass that the homilist would charge his friend to “unfurl the Catholic banner on the banks of the St. Lawrence and on the shores of Ontario and Lake Champlain.”

Wadhams and his successors as bishop of Ogdensburg have done that in the 150 years that followed. Three recent bishops of Ogdensburg were among those present: Bishop Paul S. Loverde, eleventh bishop of Ogdensburg, Bishop Gerald M. Barbarito, twelfth bishop of Ogdensburg and Bishop Robert J. Cunningham, thirteenth bishop of Ogdensburg.

Deacon Kevin Mastellon

The host for the celebration was Bishop Terry R. LaValley, fourteenth and current bishop of Ogdensburg.

The music was spectacular, the pomp done just right, the celebration fitting and appropriate. The Mass, as always, was beautiful.

Deacon Kevin Mastellon ministers in Watertown. He is the Director of Permanent Deacons for the Diocese of Ogdensburg.
Prayer for peace

“This is a year in which peace has been trampled upon. The dignity of life and its protection are neglected. During our ten days of prayer for peace this year we find ourselves in the midst of a new crisis of life,” said the President of the Japanese Bishops’ Conference, Archbishop Isao Kikuchi of Tokyo, in his message entitled “Ten Days of Prayer for Peace.”

The prelate recalled that Pope Francis emphasized the importance of solidarity in protecting life and dealing with the crisis. Regarding the conflicts shaking the world, the archbishop expressed concern that the impact of the pandemic is being exacerbated by the crisis of war. Referring to the conflict in Ukraine, Archbishop Kikuchi condemned “the violent act of a great power that tramples on the growing efforts of the international community for peace” and recalled “the desires of so many who want to protect life and seek peace.”

“During the pandemic, we have learned that supporting one another and caring for each other’s lives is the best way to protect life. Peace is not simply the absence of conflict, but a situation in which the various factors in society that potentially lead to conflict are eliminated and life is lived in mutual support,” he states.

“Now the world is overwhelmed by the feeling that peace can be achieved through violence. But that would only trample on true peace,” reads the text of the message, which reproduces Pope Francis’ Easter message “Urbi et Orbi” of April 17, in which the Pontiff appeals: “Please, please, let us not get used to war! Let us all commit ourselves to imploping peace, from our balconies and in our streets! Peace! May the leaders of nations hear people’s plea for peace.”

The head of the Japanese bishops noted with regret that the war is causing a deep crisis in the lives of thousands of people who are being forced to leave their homes, flee and face dangers: “The gift of God, life, must be preserved from beginning to end. Those of us who live in this common home are called to stand up for ecological justice, that is, to defend human life from conception to death and all forms of life on earth.”

“In our Ten Days of Prayer for Peace,” reads the text addressed to the Japanese faithful, “we have time to reflect and act for peace. Every war brings consequences that affect the entire human family: from the grief over the refugee drama to the economic and food crisis. Let us be conquered by the peace of Christ! Peace is possible; peace is a duty; peace is the most important responsibility of all.”

ON Sunday, July 24, Bishop Terry R. LaValley visited St. Martin's Church in Port Leyden and St. Mary's Church in Constableville. He celebrated the Masses with Father Lawrence Marrullo, pastor (back right), Deacons James Chaufty and Deacon Michael Lieber. Bishop LaValley, Father Marrullo and the deacons are shown with some of the children who attended the 10 a.m. Mass at St. Mary’s, including altar server Aubrey Morcek (front center).

The Port Henry Knights of Columbus recently held a Chicken BBQ to benefit the Catholic Community of Moriah Parish. Pictured is Father Al Hauser accepting a check from Grand Knight Tom Keck in the amount of $2,400. The proceeds will go towards the churches fuel oil costs this winter.
