Pope: Never ‘too late’ to receive God’s love

By Courtney Mares
Catholic News Agency

Pope Francis said Sunday that regardless of one’s stage of life, it is never too late to receive God’s love.

Speaking in his Angelus address on Sept. 24, the pope said that God is seeking us out at every hour of the day and that his “bighearted” love for us is not based on our merits.

“This is how God is: He does not wait for our efforts to come to us,” Francis said. “He does not give up if we are late in responding to him. On the contrary, he himself has taken the initiative and through Jesus came to us to show us his love.”

“And he seeks us at all hours of the day, which, as St. Gregory the Great states, represent the different stages and seasons of our life up to old age (cf. Hymn to the Flesh of Christ, 19).”

“For his heart, it is never too late; he is always looking for us and waiting for us.”

The pope spoke from the window of the Apostolic Palace overlooking St. Peter’s Square one day after he gave a strong condemnation of euthanasia on his return flight from Marseille in southern France, saying there is such a thing as “bad compassion.”

Pope Francis spent two days in the French city, where he spoke at a meeting of young people and bishops called Mediterranean Encounter with a message that the deepening migrant crisis unfolding in the Mediterranean is “a reality of our times” that calls for wisdom and a collaborative response from European nations.

“Dear brothers and sisters, today we celebrate World Migrant and Refugee Day, under the theme ‘free to choose whether to migrate or to stay,’ as a reminder that migrating should be a free choice and never the only one possible,” he said on Sunday.

Reflecting on his trip to France, Pope Francis said that the challenge of creating communities that can welcome and integrate migrants was “at the heart” of the Mediterranean Encounter event.

“It is necessary that every man and every woman be guaranteed the opportunity to live a dignified life, in the society in which they find themselves. Unfortunately, misery, wars, and climate crisis force so many people to flee,” he said.

“Therefore, we are all called to create communities ready and open to welcome, promote, accompany, and integrate those who knock on our doors.”
Breaking the bad

“If it weren’t for bad luck, I’d have none at all,” I told my friend. I think we’ve all had those times in our lives when everything seems to go wrong. I was in one of those times. I was overwhelmed. I was struggling. A friend of mine knew I wasn’t doing well, and he invited me to visit it and go out to dinner. While this friend and I text regularly, he lives an hour from me, so I don’t see him often.

Reunited, my friend and I caught up about where we were on our journeys. It was a conversation about several very heavy topics. The conversation continued into our dining outing, as did the heaviness.

And then came the moment of light.

“Woah! Look at the smile on her face,” I said to my friend, gesturing to a young child being held by her father, who was spinning and dancing to music that was being played at the restaurant. “It’s like she’s smiling with her whole body! Her little shrieks and giggles are beautiful! There’s so much joy there!”

My friend and I sat for a moment just appreciating the dinner and the moment of beauty and joy, watching the little girl very happily dancing with her dad.

When the duo ended their dance and thanked the musician, the moment of light didn’t escape us. My friend and I reflected on the moment. We both knew it was a gift from God – a moment of joy, love, beauty and light when we needed one, and a reprieve from the darkness and gloom.

I have a bad habit of getting bogged down in moments and losing sight of the bigger picture. When I’m in a period of bad luck, it’s easy for me to feel like the whole world is bad or life is just bad. God is constantly giving me these reminders that it isn’t true. He reminds me that there is always goodness, love and beauty, because He is always there, and He is always good, love and beauty.

And because I have a good and loving God, and because He’s gifted me with amazing family and friends, I have it all, even when I don’t feel like it.

Appreciating priests

Recently, our diocese celebrated Priest Appreciation Sunday. Each parish expressed their appreciation to their pastor for his dedication to the people of the parish. Today, I would like to take a few minutes to acknowledge my appreciation for the priests who have touched my life in a special way. I truly appreciate them. I have been blessed to have had many priests help and guide me. I believe Jesus sent them into my life.

I have been grateful when I was mentioned and appreciated by the people of a parish while I was active. It was a very special recognition. I am certain that each pastor and priest in the diocese has been very grateful when told that they were appreciated.

Now my most appreciated priests: This story goes back to my own childhood. I suspect I have told you this story before, but here we go again. My mother died when I was 10 years old.

On the day of her death, I was a camper at a summer camp, Lourdes Camp on Skaneateles Lake. The chaplain at camp was one of those priests that everyone really liked. I am disappointed that I can’t remember his name today. However, I will never forget his gentleness. He invited me to take a walk with him. As we walked, he carefully and gently explained what had happened to my mother. I continue to remember how good he was with me. I certainly do appreciate that he was there for me and continue to remember him. He was there for me at a crucial time in my life.

Today, I would like to also mention my appreciation for many priests who were so supportive to me during my ministry as a priest. I always knew I could call upon them when I needed them. I truly leaned on them. Many became close friends, and their friendship was special to me. I continue to appreciate their friendship. They were priests who brought the presence and support of God to me. Many of them are now with the Lord. I remember them in my prayers. They helped me to be a good priest.

Today, I would also like to make certain to you that I appreciate all our priests of our Diocese of Ogdensburg. They all minister with love and enthusiasm, bringing the love of our God to all our people throughout the North Country. I am appreciative of our many young priests who add so much to the spirit of our Catholic Church in this diocese. They add so much spirit and enthusiasm to their ministry. They have made a powerful dedication as they begin this lifelong vocation to the priesthood as a priest in our North Country. They are all worthy of appreciation.

I would be amiss if I did not add to this life my appreciation for the dedication of our bishop, Bishop Terry LaValley. Since the day of his call, he has been a great leader to the people of our diocese, a true bishop to the priests of this diocese. He is special to us all, special to each parish of the Diocese of Ogdensburg.

I close with this reflection: “Lord, I sometimes wonder where I’m going and what is the meaning of my life. I wonder especially what each year holds for me. Will it bring joy or sorrow, success or failure, life or death? But then I remember that you came on earth; and that you still travel the road of life with me. And so I say to my soul: ‘Go out into the darkness and put your hand in the hand of Christ, your Brother, that will be better than a light and safer than a known path.’”

Father Kevin McEwan, Pastor of Holy Cross Parish in Plattsburgh, planned on leading a pilgrimage to Auriesville for the Eucharistic Congress. “We found out that there were no busses available because it’s leaf-peeping season. I wanted to be in solidarity with those praying at the Eucharistic Congress in Auriesville and (the synod) in Rome, to show unity. The Eucharist is the sacrament of unity, so it made sense to offer extended Eucharistic Adoration.”

Adoration will be held in the main body of St. Peter’s Church in Plattsburgh October 20-22 from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily, except during Mass times. All are welcome to attend anytime. Individuals who plan to participate are encouraged to sign up to ensure that all hours are covered. There is a sign-up sheet at St. Peter’s near the parking lot entrance.

Several catechists and staff members are helping to promote the event, including Brenda Smith. She paraphrased wisdom from others: “Adoration is great for the soul... it’s radiation therapy for mind and spirit.”

Smith also noted that “There is great holiness in Blessed Silence” and “to be able to sit quietly and speak to Jesus directly is one of the greatest gifts that He has given us.”

Holy Cross Parish also offers weekly Eucharistic Adoration throughout the year at St. John’s Church in the chapel downstairs. This year marks the 36th anniversary of Adoration in Plattsburgh. It is held Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Adorers gathered on September 30 at the 5:15 p.m. Mass at St. John’s to celebrate the anniversary, which falls on October 1. The Mass was also followed by a blessing of the roses which is traditionally done on the feast of St. Therese.

A parochial vicar at Holy Cross, Father Michael Marzan, underscored the importance of Eucharistic evangelization. “In this Eucharistic revival the Church intended to bring Catholics back to the ‘summit and source’ of Christian life of the Catholic Faith,” he said. “Indeed, young people need the Eucharist explained to them. Parents and educators need to ensure that young people know and understand this difficult but essential truth. The Catholic formation requires more than instruction - it requires the experience of God in wonder and sacrament. It requires beauty and reverence. And it requires the clear witness of adults around them.”

Linda Bracy, coordinator of Eucharistic Adoration at Holy Cross, explained, “Many adorers shared personal testimonies about how, without their weekly Adoration, they don’t know how they could have made it through times such as health crises in their lives for themselves or loved ones or financial hardships, job losses or relocations, or other difficulties of some sort like the loss of loved ones.”

“This weekly time, this heart-to-heart talk with Jesus is so healing, refreshing, and invigorating,” Bracy added. “It is impossible to describe or replicate. He heals our wounds, He nourishes and fortifies us and gives us the wisdom, grace, and strength to persevere to seek and do His will.”

Adorers pray for the pope, Bishop LaValley, our priests, vocations, the sick and suffering, world peace, and all those in need. Their time with our Lord leads adorers to bring His love to others in the parish, our diocesan community, and beyond. Those who attend regularly testify to the numerous graces that time with our Eucharistic Lord brings. “Adoration is the one thing I experience all week that unfailingly brings me peace of mind,” said Marie Nacht, a lay minister and weekly adorer at Holy Cross Parish. “It’s so good to rest in the presence of the Lord.”

Several adorers noted that their weekly holy hour has helped them develop a personal relationship with the Real Presence of Jesus in the Holy Eucharist. “Adoration has been invaluable for my relationship with Christ,” added Deacon James Carlin of Holy Cross Parish. “The quiet time in with Christ has allowed me the opportunity to block out the noise of the world and focus on Him and what He is asking of my life. I have had some of my most profound spiritual experiences while praying at Adoration.”

Steven Geddes, a parish council member at Holy Cross Parish and weekly adorer, reflected, “I first learned about adoration from the Litany of St. Padre Pio where one of his titles is ‘Adorer of the Blessed Sacrament.’ The concluding prayer states ‘May we follow your Son by walking in the footsteps of St. Padre Pio.’ So I took that to heart, and while I never will be a saint, imitating their love for the Blessed Sacrament through adoration has brought me into a closer relationship with Jesus and helped me to fully realize his presence in the Eucharist.”

Testimonies also share the theme of thankfulness for God’s personal, ever-present love. “I have done adoration at the chapel in Plattsburgh weekly for a number of years. I don’t know how I would do without it in my life,” commented Barbara LaTulipe, a Holy Cross parishioner. “Thanks to the Bracy’s for keeping it going. We are truly blessed!”

Another weekly adorer from Holy Cross Parish, Kitty St. Denis, expressed her gratitude too. “I can’t thank Jesus enough for being able to be with Him at Eucharistic Adoration,” she said. “His presence and blessings are so tangible when we are faithful to visiting Him in this way.”

Kathy Racette and her husband Ken are both scheduled weekly adorers as well. “Adoration to me is the highlight of my week,” Kathy said. “I look forward to spending time with Jesus, my Savior. He is truly present in the Eucharist. He listens to my joys and sorrows. Jesus is always there for me. Also, I have learned to listen to Him, such as ‘Be still and know that I am God’ or ‘I will love you always.’ It’s a precious time for me and I recommend it for everyone who’s looking for peace and quiet and a relationship with Jesus!”

In the words of Father Marzan, “Let us take the time to kneel before Jesus in the Blessed Sacrament. Simply be present and receive the love of the Lord. When two people love each other, they want to spend time together to visit, to get to know each other better. We cannot love someone we do not know. Adoration of our Lord in the Eucharist is our chance to know Jesus better.”

A memorial and a place for connections

Just yards from the entrance to the beach at Camp Guggenheim, there’s a shaded spot where Will Ward once sat enjoying his time at camp. This summer, a gazebo in Will’s memory was placed in that same location.

“It’s a beautiful addition to camp, and it’s in a wonderful spot,” said Mark Ward, Will’s father. “We were able to bring Will to camp a few times – for Family Camp, summer staff reunions and the 40th anniversary celebration. When we saw the location that had been picked for the gazebo, we knew God had a hand in it. We have fond memories and a photo of Will hanging out in that very spot.”

“We envision it being used in so many ways,” added Erin Ward, Will’s mother. “It would allow for outdoor activities on a rainy day at camp, a place for outdoor crafts and workshops. A lot of thoughtfulness went into it. There are benches that can be moved around depending on the needs, and the gazebo has a ramp. The addition of the ramp was important to us. It’s a thoughtful consideration and it’s just one more thing to help make camp accessible to everyone.”

William M. Ward was born with a rare condition, Myotubular Myopathy, a condition typically associated with muscular weakness, including breathing and swallowing difficulties. Will died in 2021 at age 20.

“Focusing on supportive technology, a ventilator helped him breathe. He used a wheelchair to get around. He had communication tech. He always took all of it in stride, and he had this amazing, easy-going spirit. Lots of people find cause to complain or feel bad for themselves, but Will was always such a delight, and he was generous with love and joy. He taught us, as his parents and people around him, so much about faith and joy and love of life.”

“He had a strong spiritual life,” Erin Ward said. “He did CCD classes. He went to confession using his communication device. He made his confirmation. St. Jude was the saint he chose because of his devotion to hope in hopeless situations. He was incredibly patient. So many people have told us stories – some of which we didn’t know about – of how Will impacted their lives and their faith journeys. He was like our quiet teacher.”

Will was a fan of the Boston Red Sox and Taylor Swift.

“He loved things kids love,” his mom said.

He also enjoyed time at Camp Guggenheim.

The Wards have a special fondness for Camp Guggenheim. Mark and Erin’s relationship grew after they served together as counselors from 1994-96.

“It’s hard to put into words and hard to overstate the importance of Camp Guggenheim in our journeys,” Mark Ward said. “It was a huge part of our forming us as Catholics and forming us to be a married couple. It’s where we met. The experiences we shared through those three summers on staff – the loves we touched and that touched us, and the lessons learned – continue to hold us and help us many years later.”

Erin Ward said she felt their time at Camp Guggenheim helped prepare them for their future journeys.

“In many ways, it was at camp that planted the seed and oriented our hearts toward service,” she said. “That continued to bloom. And the skills we developed at camp – how we work with people and how we collaborate – served us throughout our lives. We went on to do non-profit work for Will’s rare disease. We incorporated so many skills we developed as counselors. We were blessed that Will was able to experience camp and that there were a lot of opportunities for him to be included.”

Mark and Erin Ward said they’re blessed to maintain contact with people they met at and through Camp Guggenheim. It was some of those connections who came up with the idea and most of the funding to honor Will with the gazebo.

“We weren’t the ones who initiated this,” Erin Ward said. “It was people we know from camp – (Deacon) Jim and Rita Crowley, Calvin Company, Scott McDonald, Michelle Watkins. We’re very blessed and grateful.”

The gazebo was dedicated August 6, the weekend Mark and Erin celebrated their 25th anniversary.

“It was right before week 6 drop-offs at camp,” Erin Ward said. “A lot of our friends from camp were able to join us, since they were dropping off kids for week 6.”

The Wards reflected on the experience on social media shortly after the dedication.

“We have so much gratitude to the current camp staff for accommodating us and joining with us before kicking off your last week of summer camp – you are all amazing,” the Wards wrote. “And our deepest, heartfelt thanks to all our family and friends who gathered, both in person and in spirit, to honor Will in this very special way. Getting a chance to reconnect, share memories, and lots and lots of laughs is always so good for our souls, and a reminder of the friendships that last a lifetime no matter where we all travel, and same place that calls us home.”

Call for transformation

“How can we contribute to the mighty river of justice and peace in this Season of Creation?” Pope Francis asked in his Sept. 1 message during the World Day of Prayer for the Care of Creation. We must “resolve” to transform our hearts, our lifestyles and the public policies ruling our societies, he answered.

Transforming our hearts is accepting that “made in God’s image” means we are all — humans, animals, nature, Earth — interdependent. It means taking on the suffering of people most harmed and finding fair solutions that respect poorer and indigenous cultures.

Transforming our lifestyles becomes urgent as our hearts are transformed. Less developed nations lose lives, land and livelihoods to drought, floods, and violence resulting from greenhouse gas emissions largely from industrialized nations. We must lessen our dependence on fossil fuels and transition to renewable energy while carefully considering economic and labor impacts.

Transforming public policies involves changing economic models of excessive consumption that make the rich richer and the poor poorer. Catholics are fortunate to have great examples for embracing a simple life “less is more,” such as St. Francis of Assisi. We can commit to studying our candidates for public office urging priority be given to caring for God’s Creation.

As Pope Francis said in his World Day of Prayer address, “Truly, much can be done, provided we come together like so many streams, brooks and rivulets, merging finally in a mighty river to irrigate the life of our marvelous planet and our human family for generations to come.”

Prayer to Blessed Virgin

Oh most beautiful Flower of Mt. Carmel, Fruitful Vine, Splendor of Heaven, Blessed Mother of the son of God, Immaculate Virgin, assist me in my necessity.

Oh, Star of the sea, help me and show me herein you are my Mother. Oh, Holy Mary, Mother of God, Queen of Heaven and Earth, I humbly beseech you from the bottom of my heart to succor me in this necessity. There are none that can withstand your power. Oh, show me herein you are my mother. Oh Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee (3 times). Holy Mother, I place this cause in your hands (3 times).

Canadian bishops address protection of minors, vulnerable adults

By Tyler Arnold
Catholic News Agency

On the second day of the 2023 Plenary Assembly of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops (CCCB), a bishops’ committee provided recommendations on diocesan policies that are focused on protecting minors and vulnerable adults to all the bishops in attendance.

The Standing Committee for Responsible Ministry and the Protection of Minors and Vulnerable Persons has studied the issue of “vulnerable persons” over the past year, looking at how to define vulnerability, how to reduce risks, and what behaviors should be encouraged on the part of those in ministry, according to the CCCB.

During a Tuesday news conference, Richard Fréchette, who serves on the committee, said “many dioceses already have a code of conduct for priests” but that much of the previous work had been solely focused on protecting minors. He said the committee presented a code of conduct template that incorporated protections on all vulnerable persons, noting the “importance of having that as part of the code of conduct.”

Archbishop Paul-André Durocher of the Archdiocese of Gatineau, who also serves on the committee, said the protections for vulnerable persons are meant to prevent people from “using positions of authority to impose themselves and demand various kinds of [sexual] favors ... of people who are under their care.”

The archbishop said the committee was motivated, in part, by the “Me Too” movement, which he said showed this problem in the sports world, the artistic world, the media world, and “unfortunately, the Church world, also.”

Durocher added that all of the Canadian bishops engaged in a study session that looked into three case studies and provided recommendations on how to address these issues if they arise.

Fréchette noted that the committee discussed a variety of issues related to conduct, such as harassment, violence, sexual conduct, information technology, and financial issues.

The bishops began their annual four-day meeting on Monday, and it comes to a close on Thursday. They have gathered in King City, Ontario, just outside of Toronto.

On the first day, the bishops prepared for the Synod on Synodality, which begins in Rome in about a week. Four Canadian bishops and four Canadian non-bishop participants will take part in the global synod. They also discussed humanitarian efforts in Honduras.

The bishops also plan to address the growing practice of euthanasia in Canada and the recent expansion of eligibility to include those suffering from mental health conditions. They plan to discuss the importance of promoting palliative care rather than euthanasia.

Cardinal Dolan: Biden ‘doesn’t take my calls’ on migrant crisis

Cardinal Timothy Dolan, the archbishop of New York, said in an interview that President Joe Biden is ignoring his calls about the “tragic, broken” migrant system in the U.S., which has landed tens of thousands of migrants and refugees in New York City, filling shelters to capacity. “He doesn’t take my calls or answer my letters,” the cardinal told the New York Post. New York City Mayor Eric Adams said last week that 60,000 migrants who crossed the southern border are in New York City, while 10,000 more are expected to come each month. Adams’ office said in a press release last week that since the beginning of the crisis, more than 116,000 migrants have been housed in the city.

In an interview on Sunday, Adams said that if the city doesn’t continue to receive support from the federal government, the outcome for New York City could be “extremely devastating.” The mayor has been voicing his concerns for the city throughout the overwhelming influx of migrants and said in July: “It’s not going to get any better. From this moment on it’s downhill. There is no more room.”

Pope’s next environmental document to be ‘Laudate Deum’

Pope Francis’ new document on the environment, to be released Oct. 4, will be called Laudate Deum. The pope shared the name of his latest apostolic exhortation during a meeting with Latin American university rectors on Sept. 21, though the speech was only made public by Vatican News in Spanish on Monday afternoon. According to Vatican News, while speaking about the environment and the “culture of abandonment,” Pope Francis revealed that his new document on the topic will be titled Laudate Deum, which means “Praise God” in Latin.

It will be, he said, “a look at what has happened and say what needs to be done,” Vatican News reported. In the same speech to 200 university personnel, Francis reflected on what he has termed a throwaway culture, saying it reveals “a lack of education to use the things that remain, to remake them, to replace them in the order of the common use of things.” He encouraged a “good use of nature,” including practical actions that can help the environment.

Abducted priest in Nigeria released, diocese ‘grateful’

The Diocese of Enugu in Nigeria has expressed its gratitude to God and the faithful following the release of Father Marcellinus Obioma Okide, who had been abducted on Sept. 17. In a Sept. 22 statement obtained by ACI Africa, CNAs news partner in Africa, Father Wilfred Chidi Agubuchie, the chancellor of the Enugu Diocese, said: “We are glad to inform you that our brother and priest, Father Marcellinus Obioma Okide, has been released from the den of the kidnappers.” Agubuchie said Okide, a parish priest at St. Mary Amofia-Agu Afia Parish in the Enugu Diocese, was set free on Thursday evening, Sept. 21. “The Catholic Diocese of Enugu is grateful to the Almighty God for his protection over Father Okide, and thanks you for your prayers and Masses throughout this difficult period,” Agubuchie said.

Book explores J.R.R. Tolkien’s faith

By Jonah McKeown
Catholic News Agency

Most people are likely aware – at least vaguely – that J.R.R. Tolkien, the author of “The Hobbit” and “The Lord of the Rings,” was Catholic.

Fewer, perhaps, know how seriously he took his faith, in a time and place where being Catholic carried serious negative societal consequences.

A new book from Word on Fire – “Tolkien’s Faith: A Spiritual Biography” – explores the renowned fantasy author’s Catholic faith and how it influenced his stories, delving primarily into Tolkien’s own writings and interviews as well as the testimonies of those who knew him best.

Holly Ordway, the book’s author, told CNA that she sought to create a book that is inviting and accessible to non-Catholics. The book itself seeks to explain the Catholic faith that Tolkien had, she said, but in an objective way, not in a way that the reader – who is perhaps a Tolkien fan, but has no understanding of Catholicism – is “hit over the head with a heavy-handed Christian message.”

“I was one of those readers, because I am myself a convert. I first read ‘Lord of the Rings’ as a non-Christian and loved it,” Ordway told CNA.

“I’ve aimed to help readers understand Tolkien’s faith on his own terms, neither praising or criticizing it.”

Today, Ordway is the Cardinal Francis George professor of faith and culture at the Word on Fire Institute and visiting professor of apologetics at Houston Christian University. She said she was inspired, in part, to undertake the book to coincide with the 50th anniversary of Tolkien’s death on Sept. 2, 2023, but also because she had come to realize that a book solely dedicated to Tolkien’s faith had yet to be written. Humphrey Carpenter’s official biography mentions his faith, she said, but only as relates to the faith of his mother; other biographical media, such as a 2019 biopic, barely mention his faith at all.

John Ronald Reuel Tolkien, born in 1892, was baptized an Anglican in South Africa, where his family lived before he; his mother, Mabel; and his brother, Hillary, moved to Birmingham, England.

Tolkien’s father died suddenly while still in South Africa, leaving Mabel to raise the two boys alone. During this time, Mabel converted to Catholicism. Tolkien made the choice to follow his mother into her new faith, receiving the sacraments of holy Communion and Confirmation at the age of 12.

It’s hard to overstate how consequential Mabel and John’s conversions were. Mabel’s family cut off all financial and emotional support permanently, leaving the family destitute. Tolkien later described Mabel, who died in 1904 when she was only 34 and he was 12, as a “martyr.”

Ordway found that it was far from a foregone conclusion that Tolkien would retain the faith he embraced as a child. The familial and societal challenges that presented themselves were bad enough, not to mention Tolkien’s horrific experiences in the trenches of World War I, which challenged his faith and shaped his worldview immensely.

Additionally, Ordway said her extensive research for the book included a look at the anti-Catholic climate of the time in order to accurately paint a picture of just how consequential Tolkien’s conversion was.

“Recognizing exactly how anti-Catholic English culture was when he was growing up makes it all the more remarkable that he was incredibly generous-spirited towards other traditions,” she commented.

Father Francis Morgan, a priest of the Congregation of the Oratory of St. Philip Neri in London, would later take on a major role in Tolkien’s life as a substitute father figure. Tolkien wrote proudly of his Catholic faith, including his love for the Eucharist, and was strengthened in his Christian convictions by his friendship with C.S. Lewis, a highly renowned Christian author in his own right.

Tolkien is very clear in his writings that “The Lord of the Rings” is not a Christian allegory, contrasting the “Narnia” books by his friend Lewis. He nevertheless described “The Lord of the Rings” as “a fundamentally religious and Catholic work.”

Ordway said it is clear that Tolkien’s Catholic worldview is infused in his stories.

“There are Marian figures, there are Christ-like figures ... what he’s imbuing into the story is the fundamentally religious element. I think he chose that word carefully ... fundamentally at the fundamentals, at the roots. So things like his understanding of good and evil, and he has a very clearly Catholic understanding of that,” Ordway said.

“He says, ‘I don’t believe in absolute evil, but I do believe in absolute good.’ So he’s explicitly rejecting a dualistic view of the world and he’s affirming the fundamental Catholic view. God does not have an ontologically equivalent opposite. God is the supreme, and evil is parasitic.”

Tolkien also prizes in his books the virtues of pity and mercy, which are “fundamentally Christian concepts,” Ordway said. “The Lord of the Rings” also strongly proffers the idea that suffering – while real and painful – can also be redemptive.

“I think that is a message that is profoundly Christian, profoundly Catholic, and profoundly meaningful. It speaks to people even if they don’t know that it has any connection to the Christian faith,” Ordway said.

“Even if you don’t recognize the fact that these elements are Christian, I think people are still responding to the reality of it. They’re still experiencing the beauty of goodness and the sordidness of evil and wanting goodness to prevail. And that’s a big deal in today’s world, to recognize something as fundamental as the reality of goodness,” she continued.

“By the time someone who’s not a Christian, by the time they get to the end of [my] book, first of all, they will know a lot more about Christianity and Catholicism than they did before ... they’ll see that whatever Tolkien believed, it wasn’t simple or trivial or foolish. It was something substantial. It meant a lot to him. And that opens the door for them to say, ‘Maybe I should look into this some more.’”

Holy Spirit
You who make me see everything and show me the way to reach my ideal. You who give me the Divine Gift to forgive and forget the wrong that is done to me and You who are in all instances of my life with me. I in this short dialogue thank you for everything and confirm once more that I never want to be separated from you no matter how great material desire may be. I want to be with you and my loved ones in your perpetual glory. Amen. Thank you for your love toward me and my love ones.

Workers in God’s vineyard

Those of us who live in Upstate New York are finding more and more vineyards dotting the landscape. They are a most welcome sight. No wonder God used the image of a vineyard to describe the chosen people of Israel.

In today’s first reading, Isaiah uses a well-known Song of the Vineyard to describe “how his friend (God) went to establish a vineyard in constructing his vineyard, with ditches and a tower for protection, and a wine press for squeezing out the precious grape juice that would become delicious wine.

How disappointed God was when his vineyard produced only wild grapes, unfit for a good yield. All that work and loving care came to nothing! So, God decided to tear down that vineyard and let it revert to pastureland. Even as Isaiah was prophesying, the Assyrians were pounding at the gates of Jerusalem, about to destroy the city.

Jesus in the Gospel uses that same image of a vineyard to describe Jerusalem in His time. He focused on the unfaithful people who, by their sin and failure to listen to the prophets, had brought God’s anger down on them. Jesus’ reference to the killing of the King’s only Son was not lost on the Pharisees. They had already decided to kill this Jesus who claimed to be the son of God. Jesus’ words enraged them, and their hearts were further hardened against Him.

In the early days of America, trading companies and land agents, eager to bring Europeans to our shores, often described the new world as a “garden of the gods,” rich in natural resources and opportunity. And so it was! It was very much like the vineyard of today’s Gospel.

Today, not only preachers, but even the average citizen is aware that greed, selfishness, indifference, as well as relativism in morals is spoiling the garden. October is Pro-Life month. Abortion and the culture of death is far from conquered. It is the worm killing the grapes in the vineyard and spoiling the garden. We are even slow to compassion and action in regard to immigration reform at home and the massacre of Christians abroad. Yes, we are killing the garden. There is an axiom in law which states that the greater the person offended, the greater the offense itself. Since God himself was the victim in today’s parable, the offense against Him was beyond measure. Jesus directed the story at the Pharisees. Who does He direct it against in today’s society?

We are the workers in God’s vineyard which the Lord has given us to tend. Are we working hard enough to stop what is killing the grapes?

The time came to harvest

In 1957, Pope Pius XII spoke favorably about restoring the diaconate as a permanent order to the Church universal but concluded “the time was not yet ripe.”

When the bishops met for the 2nd Vatican Council six years later, the idea that had been kicking around for a couple of centuries finally matured, and the bishops voted to recommend to the pope that he restore the order.

In June 1967, Pope Paul VI implemented the decree of the Council, leaving it up to the particular churches, like a diocese, to implement the order when the local bishop decided it would be in the interest of the people of the church he shepherded.

Bishop Stanislaus J. Brzana restored the diaconate to this diocese on April 22, 1977.

Father Donald Manfred, now pastor in Croghan and Harrisville, was the first formation director.

He was asked to educate the priests of the diocese about the diaconate, find some candidates for the first class, develop a curriculum for the men to prepare them for diaconal ministry, put the formation program together and find some faculty.

With God’s grace, hard work and a lot of help, Father Don accomplished all that, and the first ordination of deacons in the Diocese of Ogdensburg took place on the feast of St. Francis of Assisi, a deacon by the way, October 4, 1980.

It is a terrible thing to not be loved, not enthusiastically welcomed, not even acknowledged in some cases. Sometimes that’s the way the first deacons felt.

Throughout the country, those first deacons of the modern age, and those who followed close behind, soon found they were like the youngster who got thrown into the ocean by a parent who joked “let’s see if the kid can swim.”

The newly ordained deacons did not have much direction about their role in the parish and frankly, their pastors were just as uncertain.

Some priests objected to the presence of a deacon since the latter did not have the formation in philosophy and theology that priests did.

The deacons in this diocese started to worry about things like their ongoing spiritual development and continuing education. The diocese is not providing it, they wrote in some early meeting minutes, so we better care for each other and our wives.

That’s how the St. Lawrence Society of Deacons was born. It is a community of deacons, their wives, and widows of deacons. The society’s main purpose today is supporting the annual assembly of deacons and sponsoring an annual retreat for deacons. The society’s elected president is a member of the Council of Deacons to the Bishop.

The situation for deacons has vastly improved over the 46 years since the order was restored in the Diocese of Ogdensburg thanks to Bishop LaValley’s support of the order.

The Conference of Bishops writes, “as ministers of Word, deacons proclaim the Gospel, preach, and teach in the name of the Church. As ministers of Sacrament, deacons baptize, lead the faithful in prayer, witness marriages, and conduct wake and funeral services. As ministers of Charity, deacons are leaders in identifying the needs of others, then marshaling the Church’s resources to meet those needs. Deacons are also dedicated to eliminating the injustices or inequities that cause such needs. But no matter what specific functions a deacon performs, they flow from his sacramental identity. In other words, it is not only WHAT a deacon does, but WHO a deacon is, that is important.”

Deacon Kevin Mastellon ministers in Watertown.

He is the Director of Permanent Deacons for the Diocese of Ogdensburg.
Niger is a country in central Africa that is 80% covered by the Sahara Desert. Recent political upheaval, poor crops, and being landlocked on all sides has negatively impacted the lives of citizens. Here we hear from Father Rafael Casamayor, a missionary, describing his efforts in the region.

“Despite the uncertainty in which the country lives after the coup of July 26, we continue to work. Harvests throughout the Sahel are poor and the closure of the borders, especially those of Benin, means that food is becoming increasingly scarce, and prices are rising at an alarming rate,” said Father Rafael Casamayor, who works as a missionary in the community of Dosso, Diocese of Niamey, and shared with Fides the initiative of a campaign with which the mission wants to contribute to the fight against famine.

“We are in our mission in Dosso committed to helping the most disadvantaged families who are already in a difficult and almost impossible situation. We have decided to do this as discreetly as possible so as not to cause tension within the community. The four base communities of the mission will be responsible for the most disadvantaged families, we intend to organize different distributions depending on our possibilities and the events in this very uncertain time.”

Niger belongs to the Sahel zone, a vast area between the Sahara Desert and the African savannah, home to the poorest countries in the world. Climate change is having a severe impact on this area, where crops are becoming increasingly scarce, and famines more frequent. This year, rainfall was insufficient, and crops were destroyed in a large area. […]

“With the parish council of our mission we have worked out a project on how we can intervene,” reports Father Casamayor. “We are all poor here, starting with all the members of the Christian community, but no one has held back. We will ask for donations for the most needy, whether Christian or Muslim, the poorest in the city and we have decided to entrust the project to the four grassroots communities that know the neighborhoods and the people. Those responsible will discreetly compile a list of families in need and distribute it in the most confidential manner. The first action took place last week in the evening, in the most remote, small and humble places with the simplest people who, to our surprise, greeted us with the words: ‘It is God who sends you to us.’ “We returned to the mission in the middle of the night, full of joy, with the intention of returning next month. So, we continue, God willing.” Article from FIDES missionary news service of the Pontifical Mission Societies.
