Pope Francis recovering after surgery

By Hannah Brockhaus
Catholic News Agency

(CNA) - Pope Francis is "steadily improving" two days after he underwent abdominal surgery to correct an incisional hernia, a Vatican spokesman said Friday.

According to Matteo Bruni, the pope rested during the night and on the morning of June 9 was able to eat breakfast and move from his hospital bed to an armchair.

"The medical team reports that the clinical picture is steadily improving and the postoperative progress is normal," he said in a brief statement released shortly before 1 p.m. Rome time.

He added that Pope Francis was able to read the newspaper and do some work.

Francis underwent a three-hour surgery for an incisional hernia on June 7. A team of surgeons removed scar tissue and operated on a hernia in the pope’s abdominal wall at the site of a previous surgical incision.

Dr. Sergio Alfieri, the pope’s main surgeon, said at a press conference shortly after the operation that Francis had been experiencing increasing pain for several months due to the hernia and decided on June 6 to undergo the surgery to correct it.

The 86-year-old Francis has been hospitalized three times in the past two years.

He was hospitalized for four days in March for a lung infection and has also dealt this year with a recurrence of diverticulitis, a painful inflammation of bulges in the large intestine for which he was operated on in July 2021.

Dr. Alfieri said the pope has also been sent a get-well card from children being treated at the Vatican-connected Bambino Gesù Hospital in Rome.
As I was preparing to celebrate Mass this morning, I considered the wonderful, even powerful feast days that our Catholic Church liturgy is celebrating these days. As Church, we celebrate a feast day in honor of the Holy Trinity; we celebrate a feast day in honor of the Most Holy Body and Blood of Christ (Corpus Christi); we celebrate a feast day in honor of the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

The Feast of the Holy Trinity is a feast day in honor of God. I know every Mass is a celebration in honor of God. This feast day of the Holy Trinity celebrates and makes us recognize that our God is a Trinity - God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Spirit. We celebrate the Holy Trinity each time we make the Sign of the Cross. Theologically, we know the meaning of the Holy Trinity is not easily understood; the Holy Trinity is a mystery for us.

Yet, we, Catholics, still know a great deal about God. This is the message of Jesus we continue to find in the Gospels. Jesus tells us a great deal about God, the Father. Jesus makes it clear that God loves us all unconditionally. God the Father is forgiving and loving. Jesus demonstrates to us that he, the Son, was sent by the Father to save us, not condemn us. Jesus comes to live with us, to die for us, to rise again to lead us to a new life. In love, the Father and the Son send the Holy Spirit to empower us. The Holy Spirit comes to us all in the sacraments of baptism and confirmation to lead and guide.

The Feast of the Holy Trinity brings us the message of God’s great love for us all. Jesus commissioned the apostles to bring the Good News of God’s love for us all, to baptize all in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

As you are already aware, I was incorrect. I made it through the first three weeks of an education class before I very clearly discerned that I was not, in fact, called to be a teacher. I ended up with a degree in History/Government with a major in English and no plans for what to do with that education.

While I’ve grown a lot of my skills since then, my ability to plan and predict my future hasn’t improved one bit. I’ve said it many times: When I think I have a good, concrete plan for my life, I’m pretty sure God says, “oh yeah? Watch me.”

In every single one of those instances, I was devastated. I get attached to my plans. I get attached to the vision I have of my life and/or my future. I sometimes grieved the loss of those plans and visions.

Looking back, though, it’s abundantly clear God’s plan has been better than mine. I can think of countless examples of times the destruction of my plans resulted in a better outcome than I envisioned.

I pray for members of the class of 2023, both high school and college, as they step into the next chapters in their lives. I pray they see their futures through the lens of Christ and allow him to guide them. I pray they let God into their hearts and into their plans as they ask themselves and are asked by others that same question: “What’s next?”

A note from Bishop Chbeir

Editor’s note: Bishop Terry R. LaValley recently received the following correspondence from Bishop Antoine Chbeir, bishop of the Diocese of Latakia in Syria. The Diocese of Ogdensburg is in a “twinning relationship” with that diocese through its Solidarity in Faith initiative. Learn more at rcody.org/about/solidarity-in-faith. Bishop Chbeir receives the email edition of the North Country Catholic weekly.

Dear Bishop Terry,

I hope this email finds you well as well as the clergy of the diocese, in particular Msgr. C. John McAvoy, Msgr. John Murphy, Fr. Michael Gaffney, Fr. Richard Demers, Fr. Patrick Ratigan, Fr. Robert Decker, Fr. Sony Pulickal, celebrating jubilee years of service! May the Lord bless all of them for these long years of service, and a special prayer goes for both Msgr. John Murphy and Fr. Richard Demers for not being able to attend that important event.

It is always nice to hear from you, about your activities through the diocese papers and particular thanks to Christine who has been timely providing them to me.

You never stop of surprising me with unexpected initiatives of yours which they come just in time not only for my people but for me as well, when I am in low spirits the help comes to me from the other end of the planet, knowing you care for me and my people, spending time and efforts to pray for us. The Diocese of Ogdensburg has been to my people and to me the physical presence of the Providence. If you know how many people pray for you from the bottom of their hearts because without you, they were hopeless.

Yesterday I celebrated the First Communion for few kids in Latakia, the most affected area by the earthquake, at the end of the month of May, the month dedicated to Our Lady. We had a little procession around the church in the street of the city, in honor of our Lady, asking her to protect us and the city (here are enclosed some photos). It was very moving to see people on their balconies, most of them Muslims, throwing flowers and rice on us and the statue.

Thank you for your continuing unwavering support to our people, for your sensitive attention to us. We do appreciate the efforts and sacrifices you are doing in our behalf.

Distinct regards to Fr. Steven, Fr. Kevin, Christine and all who take the trouble to assist us. You are always in our thoughts and prayers!

+ Antoine

To make the change
A day to pray for our priests

By Sister Mary Eamon Lyng, SSJ
Diocesan Vocations Coordinator

On the Feast of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, Friday, June 16, we celebrate World Day of Prayer for the Sanctification of Priests. Pope St. John Paul II established this day to invite all Catholic faithful to join in prayer for the sanctification of priests.

Every priest is the “persona Christi,” the heart of Christ’s love flowing within him to be like Christ, drawing from His heart all the love and mercy to be shared with the People of God. The hands of the priest, anointed at the time of his ordination, come under the protection of the heart of Jesus Christ, kept safely in the palm of His hands and finds himself in His protection. In one of Pope Benedict XVI’s reflections on The Hands of the Priest, he remembers his own experience of his ordination at the time of the imposition of hands in which Christ took possession of him, saying:

“...Hand in hand, the priest’s encounter with Jesus, the priest, is shared with his parish family. He is doing what Jesus did: encounter others whose faith is both strong and weak, those who might think differently, as well as those who hold other beliefs, who do not have the same faith, and he prays with them. He reaches out to the rich and poor, the sick and dying, the imprisoned and vulnerable, drawing them closer to the Person of Jesus Christ. Like Jesus, he can say, “I have called you friends.”

The highlight of his “priestly action” is to celebrate the sacraments, especially the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass. The priest is the only one who can say: “This is my Body...this is my Blood.” Jesus, the priest, exercises His priesthood through the priest in your parish. How blessed we are to have a bishop and priests in this diocese who are “the persona Christi” for the people of God!

We earnestly need to give thanks to God for the gift of each of our priests who minister to us and to our families. Let us pray for them. Let us pray for more vocations to the priesthood for this diocese, so that by “their anointed hands,” they may continue the priesthood of Christ as instruments of service and mission, shaping the People of God, and uniting them closer to Jesus Christ, the priest.

As St. Jean-Marie Vianney said, “Without the priest, the death and passion of our Lord would be no use; the priest has the keys of the heavenly treasures... What is the priest? A man who holds the place of God, a man clothed with all the powers of God.”

Environmental Stewardship

The value of fire

Among the forces of nature that shape the environment, fire is the most controversial. For thousands of years before Europeans invaded this continent, fires that were ignited by lightning periodically burned significant areas of land before being extinguished by rainstorms. These natural conflagrations typically decimated long-standing stretches of timber and transformed them into open areas with ashy dirt.

The resulting plant and animal communities that eventually spring forth from such sites produce diverse and vibrant ecosystems that renew the cycle of life. In this way, fire is the main force that ends each stage of ecological succession and starts a new cycle. Naturally occurring wildfires often pose a threat to people’s property and the resources of a wilderness area, yet fire’s positive role in the grand scheme of life in that region is difficult for any ecologist to overlook.

Disease, floods, wind and ice storms can seriously impact the stability of mature woodlands; however, none of these can cend a cycle of life in a region by inflicting as much damage as can fire.

In the North Country almost all wildfires are caused by human carelessness. As a result, once a fire breaks out, it is attacked by forest rangers and fire fighters in an attempt to limit damage.

Conditions across the region this year are exceedingly dry. It doesn’t take much of a spark to ignite a mass of tinder into a roaring blaze. Care for creation during these times requires us to ensure no source of heat comes into contact with the forest floor. Cigarette butts, campfires and fireworks must be treated with special care. Fire is nature’s most powerful force of change, and should always be treated with the utmost respect.

Bishops: Congress must act against child exploitation

By Kevin J. Jones
Catholic News Agency

Congress must act to help prevent the exposure of children to online pornography and to combat online exploitation and abuse of children and other vulnerable people, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) said Wednesday.

“Online child exploitation threatens the safety and well-being of our young people and destroys families and communities,” four leading bishops of the USCCB said in a June 7 letter to members of Congress. “The ability of a child to grow into adulthood in peace and security is both a human right and a demand of the common good: The dignity of the human person requires protections for our young people so that they may flourish as they mature.”

Signers of the letter were Bishop James V. Johnston Jr. of Kansas City-St. Joseph, who chairs the USCCB’s Committee on Protection of Children and Young People; Archbishop Borys Gudziak of the Ukrainian Archeparchy of Philadelphia, who chairs the bishops’ Committee on Domestic Justice and Human Development; Auxiliary Bishop Robert P. Reed of Boston, who chairs the Committee on Communications; and Bishop Robert E. Barron of Winona-Rochester, chair of the bishops’ Committee on Laity, Marriage, Family Life, and Youth.

The bishops’ letter alluded to Catholic failures to protect children from sexual abuse by clergy in the U.S., failures that have only been brought to light in the last two decades.

“As pastors, we have seen the destructive effects of the reprehensible offenses of child exploitation firsthand,” they said. “And as leaders of an institution that, for many years, failed to meet its responsibility to protect all children, we know all too well the consequences of a culture that fails to give adequate attention to the problem of child sexual exploitation.”

The bishops voiced concern that research indicates social media use can negatively affect young people’s mental health. They stressed the need for young people to have the opportunity to “mature to adulthood in safety and security” and to avoid pornography.

“Being exposed to pornography can be traumatic for children and youth,” the bishops said. “Seeing it steals their innocence and gives them a distorted image of sexuality, relationships, and men and women, which may then affect their behavior, including addiction to pornography. Because children lack mature understanding of appropriate behavior, pornography makes them more susceptible to victimization by sexual abuse and maltreatment.”

A majority of young people have viewed pornography, accidentally or intentionally, by the age of 13.

The bishops did not comment on any particular legislation. However, the REPORT Act passed the Senate Judicial Committee on June 1. The legislation would require websites and social media platforms to report crimes that violate federal trafficking andenticement of children laws. It would increase fines for companies that knowingly and willfully fail to report child sexual abuse material (CSAM), according to a June 1 statement from the office of U.S. Sen. Jon Ossoff, D-Georgia.

The bishops’ letter called for safeguards to ensure that pornography “causes minimum harm.” Such safeguards include prosecution of those who coerce others to produce pornographic materials and giving victims the power to remove unlawfully created pornography from internet platforms.

The bishops lamented that children and young people are coerced into the production of pornography, which is “illegal, abusive, and a form of human trafficking because of a child’s inability to consent.”

Despite parents’ efforts, the bishops said, the internet can be a dangerous place for children.

There is an “immediate need for effective safeguards” to prevent children from accessing inappropriate content. Legislation should help parents protect their children online and ensure they have “the tools necessary to monitor their children’s online activity.”

The bishops’ letter noted the dangers of abuse, extortion, and blackmail online. This includes the coercion of sexual favors or money accompanied by threats to release sexual images or money.

“Legislation should ensure that social media platforms do not permit abuse by predators or undermine the rights of parents to protect their children from harm,” they said.

NFL’s Butker wears pro-life tie to White House

By Joe Bukaras
Catholic News Agency

During the Kansas City Chiefs’ visit to the White House on Monday in celebration of their Super Bowl victory in February, the team’s kicker, Harrison Butker, made a statement in support of the unborn by wearing a custom-made necktie with a pro-life message.

Butker, a faithful Catholic, wore a tie that says “Vulnerari Praesidio,” a Latin phrase he says means “protect the most vulnerable.”

“I want to give the most vulnerable, the unborn, a voice at a place where every effort has been made to allow and normalize the tragic termination of their lives,” Butker said in a June 6 statement.

Butker is referring to the Biden administration’s aggressive pro-abortion stance, a position that has put Biden at odds with the U.S. bishops and members of his own faith.

“As a father who has experienced three miscarriages, my wife and I understand the hardships that come with losing a child. Every life is precious and should be valued whether outside or inside the womb,” he said.

The gray tie was created in conjunction with the pro-life advocacy group Live Action.

According to the organization, accompanying the tie on Butker’s suit is a gold pin of two tiny feet — the exact-size feet a 10-week-old baby would have.

Biden gave a speech at the event praising the Super Bowl champions not only for their football skills but also for using their platforms for good.

“As much as these guys know about football, they know about life and how to use their platform to make a difference,” the president said in a speech celebrating the team’s victory.

In a statement to CNA on Tuesday, Live Action president Lila Rose said that “Live Action was proud to partner with NFL superstar and pro-life advocate Harrison Butker to create a necktie in honor of the pre-born to wear while meeting President Biden at the White House.”

“President Biden is a professing Catholic who, as the most powerful man in the world, is responsible for leading the most pro-abortion administration in our history that has overseen a horrific death toll of 2,548 children every day lost to abortion,” she said.

“I call on President Biden to reject the extremism of the abortion lobby and to protect the vulnerable children of his nation,” Rose added.

Hundreds of thousands of unborn children are killed in the womb every year through abortion.

Butker kicked the Super Bowl-winning field goal for the Chiefs during his team’s stunning Feb. 12 Super Bowl victory against the Philadelphia Eagles.

In addition to his game-clinching kick, he captured media attention for his scapular, which made a timely appearance as it slipped out of his jersey while more than 100 million fans across the globe watched him line up for a 27-yard field goal attempt with 11 seconds left on the clock in a tie game.

“I think that was our Blessed Mother asking for the spotlight to be shown on her and reminding me that all the glory goes to God and to her,” Butker told CNA in March.

What would you do if Jesus tapped you on the shoulder and said, “I have a job for you?” Would you be terrified, have a fainting spell or look around to see if there is someone else He could possibly be talking to? Then, when you had recovered enough to speak, would you tell him that you really had E. uniforms were not part when you had re- Exodus. Imagine!

That idea went nowhere fast.

I have heard it said that last part of today’s Gospel, where He reminds His apostles that “without cost you have received; without cost you are to give.” Isn’t that a great saying? If we can only stir up enough gratitude for Jesus laying down His life for us, then we can find it in our hearts to return the favor and start looking around ourselves for the lost sheep right in our families and in our neighborhood. To share in the mission of Jesus takes generosity and love, humility and courage. As Jesus called the apostles by name, so has He called each of us by name. He has called us, and He expects a response. As we celebrate Fathers’ Day this Sunday, we need to give thanks to God the Father for sending His Son, Jesus, to redeem and free us for eternal life in His dwelling. As His adopted brothers and sisters, He calls us to share in His mission to the world. We have been called...we have been sent!

Those of us in the Diocese of Ogdensburg need also to acknowledge and thank our Shepherd-Father, Bishop LaValley. As a good Shepherd, He truly cares and reaches out constantly to fulfill our needs. As the priest shortage becomes more acute, He truly depends on us to help Him reach out to all in our North Country. Not only our bishop, but our priests need you so very much! Start this week praying for the courage to be bolder in looking for the lost around you, in reaching out to them in love, and leading them home to the limitless forgiveness of a loving God. And to all fathers of families, we say “thank you” for sheltering, feeding, caring, and loving your spouses and children. We pray that you will always try to imitate your great model, God our Father.

It is the vestment proper to the deacon

Last week’s Called To Serve column in the North Country Catholic rambled on about the various uniforms I wore as a youngster and in my formative years.

I was never in the military, a fireman, policeman or in the emergency services, so those uniforms were not part of my ensemble.

A few of us young reporters tried to convince the then General Manager of the TV station to buy us blazers to wear on set during the newscasts. That would be a kind of uniform. That idea went nowhere fast.

Last week I mentioned that cassock and surplice were the “uniform” of the altar server in church while serving at Mass. In many parishes today, the cassock and surplice have given way to an alb for servers. An alb is usually white, a symbol of purity. It is a full-length, long-sleeved garment. It is usually a linen tunic secured at the waist by a cord or belt called a cincture.

I have heard it said that deacons are just grown-up altar servers.

That is grossly wrong, but today’s column is not the place for the argument.

I want to address the vestments proper to deacons that Pope Paul left for the bishops to haggle about in his 1967 decree. “In the matter of wearing apparel the local custom will have to be observed according to the norms set down by the episcopal conference.”

So, the bishops of the U.S. decided.

The first vestment worn by the deacon at Mass is an alb tied with a cincture. The stole is worn on top of the alb. A bishop or another priest wears the stole around his neck with the ends hanging down in front, while the deacon places it over his left shoulder and ties it crosswise at his right side, similar to a sash.

Then comes the over garment. The difference between the chasuble worn by a priest and a dalmatic worn by a deacon comes down to sleeves. A chasuble does not have sleeves and is open-sided. A dalmatic has sleeves.

The bishops decided the dalmatic is the vestment proper to the deacon. Some argue the dalmatic lets the deacon look too similar to the priest. In the general instruction of the Roman Missal, the authors gave those folks a pass: the dalmatic may be omitted out of necessity or on account of a lesser degree of solemnity (General Instruction of the Roman Missal 338).

A pastor or two has used “may” as license to prohibit a deacon from wearing a dalmatic. Imagine if a bishop somewhere told a priest not to wear a chasuble for Mass. It will not happen.

In fact, the church clarifies the question in its instruction on the proper way to celebrate the Holy Eucharist: The proper vestment of the Deacon is the dalmatic, to be worn over an alb and stole. In order that the beautiful tradition of the Church may be preserved, it is praiseworthy to refrain from exercising the option of omitting the dalmatic. (Redeemtionis Sacramentum 125)

But what about the Roman Collar? “Is it appropriate to the deacon?” you ask. I’ll take a run at that question next week.
Pope Francis’ message on the mission

Pope Francis is currently meeting with the Annual General Assembly of the Pontifical Mission Societies (TPMS) in Rome. It is at this meeting that the attendees decide where the money raised by TPMS will be distributed.

The specific mission of the Pontifical Mission Societies, suggested the pope, can also be perceived and lived as a sign, an echo of the mercy and compassion of the Heart of Jesus, whose Solemnity falls in this month of June. “In the pierced heart of the Crucified we can discover the infinite measure of the Father’s love. He comes to seek us when we are lost; he lifts us up when we fall and raises us from the dead,” the pope said. Jesus, with his whole life, “has shown us the heart of God, that of a Father who always awaits us, sees us from afar, comes toward us with open arms; a Father who turns no one away, but welcomes all; who excludes no one, but calls everyone.”

In recalling the source of grace and mercy from which every missionary adventure draws and participates, Pope Francis recalled that the Pontifical Mission Societies “are not a mere agency for the distribution of funds for those in need of help, but a reality called to support the mission of evangelization in the Church, both universal and local and to fostering the missionary spirit among the People of God.”

The Pope urged the TPMS to “intensify even more, with the boldness and creativity of the Holy Spirit, the various activities directed to guiding, educating and forming the missionary spirit,” not only in what used to be called “mission lands” but also in countries with an ancient Christian tradition more marked “by a serious crisis of faith,” and “are in need of renewed evangelization.”

In the horizon of an authentic service to the mission and to the Church, Pope Francis wanted to recall that the collection and management of economic and material resources is only a means: “Please” said the Pope “do not reduce the Societies to money! They certainly need money, which is a means, but do not reduce them to that for they are bigger than money,” insisted the Pope.

The “important role” exercised by the TPMS is rather linked to the “dream” of “an ever closer and more coordinated missionary cooperation among all members of the Church.” A vocation and a task to be assumed “for the good of the entire People of God. It is significant - remarked the Pope in the conclusion of his speech - that the founders of the Societies were a bishop, a priest and two laywomen, that is to say, representatives of different categories of the baptized. This is a sign that commits us to involve all members of the People of God in missionary activity,” to cherish the dream of “a new era of missionary activity among Christian communities.”
