Pope reflects on Sts. Peter, Paul

Joe Bukuras
Catholic News Agency

In Pope Francis’ Angelus address Thursday on the solemnity of Sts. Peter and Paul, the Holy Father reflected on the different meanings of the first pope’s name, which he said can mean “rock, stone, or pebble.”

First, Pope Francis reflected on Peter as “rock,” which is how Jesus identifies the first-century saint in today’s Gospel passage from Matthew 16:13-19.

“And I tell you, you are Peter, and on this rock I will build my church, and the powers of death shall not prevail against it,” Jesus says to Peter in the passage after Peter correctly identifies him as the Messiah.

Pope Francis said to the crowd in St. Peter’s Square that “Peter is a rock: There are many times when he is strong and steady, genuine and generous.”

“He leaves everything to follow Jesus; he recognizes Christ, the Son of the living God; he dives into the sea to go quickly toward the Risen One,” the Holy Father said.

“Then, he boldly and courageously proclaims Jesus in the temple, before and after being arrested and flogged,” he said.

Pope Francis notes that according to tradition, St. Peter was martyred in Rome, where the Vatican is located today.

“Peter, however, is also a stone: He is a rock and also a stone, able to offer support to others — a stone that, founded on Christ, acts as support to the brothers and sisters for the building up of the Church,” he said.

Pope Francis said that Peter cares for the suffering and promotes the Gospel message.

“At times he does not understand what Jesus is doing; when confronted with Jesus’ arrest, Peter allows fear to overtake him and denies Jesus, then repents and weeps bitterly, but he does not find the courage to stand under the cross,” Pope Francis said.
I have questions

After nearly 21 years together and 19 married, my husband and I realize we weren’t connecting as frequently as we used to. We were still talking regularly, but our conversations tended to focus around day-to-day activities and not about how we’re feeling mentally, physically and/or spiritually.

Thus, we started “Questions” around a year ago. While we’ve been a bit sporadic about it lately, we try to gather at a set time each night to ask each other three questions. The format sometimes changes, but one thing has been consistent since about a month into this: We always start with “how are you feeling?” After that, we sometimes have questions that have formed naturally. Other times, we draw cards from general or couples’ conversation card decks or ask questions we’ve found through other sources of “conversation starters.”

Even after all these years, we regularly learn new information about each other through these questions. They create conversations that strengthen our bond with one another. One question card may result in a conversation that goes on for hours. On the days we do “questions” when I’m annoyed by or upset with my husband, it lessens those feelings dramatically. I thought about our “Questions” exercise as I read the articles about Natural Family Planning (NFP) in this week’s edition. Those articles helped me realize what makes “Questions” special and helpful in our relationship. It’s part of why NFP is special and helpful. Both involve loving intentionally.

By doing “Questions,” we’re intentionally making time and space for our love in a way that helps us be who we’re called to be as a married couple. We’re not leaving it to our day-to-day whims and emotional fluctuations. We’re saying, “we want to make time and space for each other even when it doesn’t seem convenient, even when we don’t feel like doing it. We want the unity to which God calls us.” Isn’t that what NFP is? It’s being intentional with our love. It’s following God’s call through our emotions and whims. It’s following God’s call to unity and beautiful love. I’m not questioning that.

‘Help my unbelief’

I often like to preach the homily at Mass with a consideration of our faith, our trust in the Lord. As followers of Jesus and members of the Catholic Church, everything begins and ends with our faith. Each Sunday at Mass, we proclaim our Catholic faith for all to hear by saying together the Creed, by proclaiming that “I believe in God.” I want all to know that my concern as a Catholic is my relationship with God. I love and adore and am ready to obey my God. My relationship with Jesus is an important part of my faith. The Lord saved me, and so I know I can always trust him to protect me. In love Jesus wants to be my friend, a forgiving friend. My faith is a free, human act that leads me to the Lord Jesus in all my actions and decisions, and I testify to this each time I pray the Creed.

Each of us, Catholics, have many wonderful and meaningful ways to declare our faith and to strengthen our readiness to trust our God. We may be reminded by the crucifix over the altar; it may be a favorite prayer, something like the Lord’s Prayer; it may be a hymn that we join in at Mass and then remember all during the day. These are opportunities to trust our God and seek the love and protection of Our God.

The challenge for us is to remain strong in faith, especially in our good relationships with Our Savior, and to do it not only when we need help or protection in a crisis. Do I only turn to the Lord when life is difficult or unhappy? God should be part of my life on the good days as well.

To teach faith I always go to Sacred Scripture, especially St. Matthew’s Gospel story of Jesus who joins the apostles in a boat sailing across the Lake of Gennesaret. As they progress, a storm begins, we are told, that the apostles become very afraid. Jesus, however, is asleep in the back of the boat. They always depend on the power of the Lord, so they awaken him with the question, “Master, do you not care about us?” Jesus calms the storm and then turns to his apostles, “Why are you so frightened? How is it that you have no faith?” I know that the Lord speaks to me in this way when I have my doubts about the Lord’s concern for me.

I know only too well that there are challenging days when my faith and trust in the Lord Jesus is weak, my doubts great – the day when storms come into my life and, in fear, I forget the Lord. I truly lose my faith. I doubt God’s concern for me. I forget the words of the Lord: “Do not be afraid.”

Jesus says, that if we have faith as small as a mustard seed, we will be able to move mountains. No, I have never moved a mountain. I realize my faith is not what it should be. I know the Lord Jesus is serious about the power of faith. He wants me to bring his love and peace into this world and that truly needs the power of faith. This is as great as moving a mountain. I know I must never give up praying and seeking a new and more powerful faith. I must realize that God will support and guide me. I must have confidence in God. Each time I celebrate the Holy Eucharist, I must pray that the Lord will strengthen my faith and trust in this Savior of mine. I have so much to accomplish these days, especially as I grow older.

I remember often the story in the Gospels of the man who came to seek the Lord Jesus’ healing for his son who was suffering so much. Jesus asked him if he believed that he could do this. The man responded, “Lord, I believe, help my unbelief.”
‘We have been called by name’

As we just heard from his letter to the people of Rome (Rom. 16:3-24), St. Paul greets a whole host of individuals who worked in the Lord’s vineyard in those early days of the Church. We are probably not very familiar with most of the names. Paul refers to them as co-workers as he expresses gratitude for their ministry.

The bishops of Vatican II observed that: It is hard to see how the Church could make her presence and action felt without the help of such dedicated laity. (cf. AA,1) AMEN to that! The urgent need for lay ministry is shown by the action of the Holy Spirit moving laity in and men today to a deeper and deeper awareness of their baptismal responsibility and everywhere urging them on to generous and selfless service of Christ and His Body, the Church.

I chose this passage from Paul’s letter to the Romans for our reflection this afternoon because Paul personalized his message to the Romans. He names his co-workers and writes about their relationships with others. In our ministry, we must never forget to recognize every person to whom we minister as a unique child of God worthy of our gracious hospitality and respect. It is good to remember that we are all companions on this journey of faith as we accompany one another to the Promised Land.

We have been called by name.

You know that we do not live in solitary splendor, we are not nameless beings, unconnected to one another.

Regardless of where artificial intelligence takes us, we are flesh and blood, heart and soul, children of God. Baptism is the great leveler – each of us possesses equal dignity and is worthy of care and concern from our neighbor.

My sisters and brothers, today this local Church sends you, disciples that you are, on a mission that must continually adapt itself to the needs of the moment. “Therefore, be firm, steadfast, always fully devoted to the work of the Lord, knowing that in the Lord your labor is not in vain.” (1Cor.15:58) It’s important to remember Paul’s phrase to the Corinthians: “in the Lord your labor is not in vain!”

Sometimes, we might get discouraged or frustrated in our parish ministry. Perhaps, it’s the parents of our children, or a student. Maybe, the parish secretary, a fellow catechist, the deacon, the pastor or, God forbid, your bishop frustrates your ministry. All sorts of obstacles may be encountered and, perhaps, too often we may feel that our efforts are in vain. When such feelings surface, it is good to ask myself: How do I measure success?

Is absolutely everything I do in ministry motivated by an honest desire to be about doing the will of God? That desire receives its necessary fuel from my prayer. Our ministry suffers in so many ways without a personal relationship with Jesus Christ. A disciplined prayer life is where we set time aside to be quiet, to listen and discern the Father’s will. Prayer is the school where we learn how to listen.

Our ministry risks becoming shallow, insincere and a mere façade, without the personal relationship with Jesus Christ that develops in our prayer. Prayer will see us through the challenges we encounter in ministry. It will provide you with the inspiration and encouragement to develop relationships, attitudes and behaviors that will affirm others, recharge you and your ministry and give you the grace to accompany, encourage and support rather than avoid the challenging, even troublesome people we meet along the way.

I want to thank Cathy Russell and all the members of the Formation for Ministry and Christian Formation staff, for their efforts in helping to prepare you to be commissioned lay ministers for the Diocese of Ogdensburg.

I pray that in your ministry, you will come to know, more and more, the Joy of the Gospel. Through it all, May God be praised...forever may God be praised!
‘In harmony with God’s design’

Dear Sisters and Brothers in Christ:

The recently deceased music icon, Tina Turner, famously sang the question: “What’s love got to do with it, got to do with it? What’s love but a secondhand emotion?” Love is more than an emotion. Love is a decision to sacrifice oneself for the good of the beloved. Love has everything to do with it! Self-discipline, delayed gratification, sacrifice, and unconditional love seem like foreign words to our vocabulary and mode of operating today.

The Church teaches that the sacrament of marriage symbolizes Christ’s relationship with His Church. It’s a relationship of generous, self-sacrificing passion-filled and fruitful love. Today, the Church’s teachings regarding sexuality meet aggressive resistance. Many consider her teaching regarding artificial contraception to be outdated, unrealistic or too burdensome.

During Natural Family Planning Awareness Week, (July 23-29), our Church focuses our attention on Marriage: One Flesh, Given and Received. Responsible parenthood asks couples to discern God’s will in their lives and to live in harmony with God’s design through natural means of family planning. In his Encyclical, Humanae Vitae, Pope St. Paul VI wrote a beautiful reflection on married love and the gift of life.

Marriage is a sacrament where spouses freely commit themselves to loving one another with a love that is fully human, respecting God’s design for marriage and sexuality. Love is not a “secondhand emotion.” While society insists that using artificial means to avoid a pregnancy are morally neutral, our faith teaches us that it is the whole person and the whole mission to which he and she are called that must be considered, both its natural, earthly aspects, and its supernatural, eternal aspects. Tragically, today we give little attention to the supernatural or things eternal.

St. Paul VI wrote that it is important to remember that one is “not the master of the sources of life but rather the minister of the design established by the Creator and to accept that there are certain limits to the power of the human person over his or her body and its functions out of reverence for God’s creation” (HV, 13, 17).

To assist you in your faith journey, I encourage you to learn more about what the Church teaches about marital love by visiting our Natural Family Planning office at our diocesan webpage. We are so fortunate to have Angelo and Suzanne Pietropaoli as directors as well as all those who help with its instruction in our marriage preparation classes.

May we all grow in respect and appreciation for our creation as male and female in the image and likeness of God. May our hearts be open to ever deeper conversion.

Faithfully yours in Christ,

Most Reverend Terry R. LaValley
Bishop of Ogdensburg

Each July, the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops sponsors Natural Family Planning Awareness Week. And each year, the event raises questions: What exactly is NFP? How does it concern the Bishops? Why should it concern me/the rest of us?

First things first. NFP is an umbrella term for certain natural methods used to achieve or avoid pregnancy. These methods are based on observation of the naturally occurring signs of the fertile and infertile phases of a woman’s cycle.

This alternation of fertility and infertility means that women are fertile only a few days in each cycle; barraging illness or injury, a man is generally fertile every day from puberty to death.

NFP methods track the changes associated with ovulation, treating each woman and each cycle as unique. Unlike the old Rhythm method, modern NFP methods are not based on calendars and predictions of fertility, but on real time observations and guidelines that have emerged from more than 50 years of scientific research and statistical verification.

Couples then use this information according to their family planning intention. To avoid pregnancy, they abstain from intercourse during the fertile time.

Despite the number of fertile days varies from woman to woman and cycle to cycle, these makes up the smallest segment of any cycle. Knowing how to identify the fertile time also helps couples achieve pregnancy when they wish to.

Since it does not involve any devices, drugs, or surgery, NFP stands alone as a healthy, organic, highly effective (98-99%) approach to family planning.

Husband and wife share responsibility for NFP, a collaboration that tends to deepen their communication and their respect for one another.

Natural Family Planning is also unique because it respects God’s design for life and love: in creating us male and female in his image, God made sexual union to be - like God’s himself - both life-giving and love-giving.

The bishops present this truth clearly and beautifully in Married Love and the Gift of Life (USCCB 2007): “Married love is powerfully embodied in the spouses’ sexual relationship, when they most fully express what it means to become ‘one body’ (Gn 2:24) or ‘one flesh’ (Mk 10:8, Mt19:6). The Church teaches that the sexual union of husband and wife is meant to express the full meaning of love, its power to bind a couple together and its openness to new life. When Scripture portrays God creating mankind ‘in his image’ (Gn 1:27), it treats the union of man and woman as joining two persons equal in dignity (‘This one at last is bone of my bones and flesh of my flesh,’ Gn 2:23), and as being open to the blessing of children: ‘Be fertile and multiply,’ Gn 1:28)...Therefore, the mutual gift of fertility is an integral part of the bonding power of marital intercourse.”

It is also, the bishops affirm, an essential part of the free, total, faithful, and fruitful love that couples promise to each other at the altar on their wedding day.

For this reason, “When married couples deliberately act to suppress their fertility, sexual intercourse is no longer fully marital intercourse. It is something less powerful and intimate, something more ‘casual.’ Suppressing fertility by using contraceptives denies part of the inherent meaning of married sexuality and does harm to the couple’s unity. The total giving of oneself, body, and soul, to one’s beloved is no time to say: ‘I give you everything I am - except...’ The Church’s teaching is not only about observing a rule, but about preserving that total, mutual gift of two persons in all its integrity.”

This Bishops’ document acknowledges that this is a hard teaching, one that “many (if not most) couples, through no fault of their own, have never heard (or not heard in a way they could appreciate or understand).”

Yet our story, caught up in the life-giving love of God, need not end there.

The Bishops conclude with a clear and hopeful message: “Living God’s design for human sexuality in marriage can be difficult. But hus-

Tyler and Megan Bourgeois were introduced by mutual friends who convinced each that the other “would be a good match because we were Catholic.” And in fact, the matchmakers got that exactly right; the couple explains as they reflect on their relationship.

From the beginning, “We just connected well. It was good to know we were both Catholic, and that faith would not be an obstacle,” they observe. “We both agreed that faith is the most important aspect of a strong marriage. We were excited to start a relationship, to have a partner, someone on your team — who, yes, is a different person, but has the same worldview and values.”

Tyler and Megan were married October 13, 2017, at Megan’s home parish of St. Stephen’s in Croghan. Their common commitment to faith and teamwork has strengthened their relationship and deepened their love. It has also proved foundational for appreciating the joys and surviving the sorrows that have come their way as they settled into marriage and started a family.

“Marriage,” they offer, “has been what it is supposed to be. We have had some really beautiful and exciting times. The births of our children - Meredith 4 ½; Elizabeth 2 ½; and Ambrose 3 months - of course stand out for us! It’s been a great blessing to have our little kids; they’re fun, energetic, and funny to watch! The innocent joy that children have is such a beautiful thing to witness. Of course, it can be challenging, three kids under five when they’re all having a bad day, or are mad, or crying, or pestering each other — no fun. We’re working on growing in virtue, especially in patience. But we see the great blessing that a family is.”

“Sometimes it’s really great, others not so much. But at the end of the day, we are on the same page with the important things; we are a team. Whatever we are going through, we’re not going through it alone. It really is a blessing to know that you have a solid teammate to face those challenges with. If we simply put first things first — the Church, living our faith well with our family, and embracing Catholic traditions all week and all year long — then we don’t have to feel alone. And of course we think that is what marriage is supposed to be: the struggles are supposed to make you better!”

“The biggest challenge we have faced is losing two babies through miscarriage. We lost both Emmanuel René and Gabriel Frances in the same year. Of course, there is no resolution to something like that, but we just generally leaned into our faith and all the beautiful wisdom of the Church. She really is an expert in humanity, and there is so much she can help you with if you know it is there and seek it out.”

But this is not a merely theoretical approach to grieving the loss of beloved children.

“From the practical perspective, we keep their memories alive. During the summer, when the cemetery is open, we often visit Emmanuel after church on Sunday. The girls talk to him at his grave, tell him about their week, and then get ice cream. We also ask both Emmanuel and Gabriel to pray for us at the end of Grace before meals and at the end of night prayers.”

How did this loss affect Tyler and Megan’s relationship?

“It’s been tough,” they acknowledge. “But like we said before, if you have the right mindset, put first things first, thank God for all your blessings even in the hard times, you grow through it. We grew closer than ever during those experiences — because we relied on each other and each of us had the opportunity to be supportive of the other (imperfectly, of course). Through that you build trust. You start to believe, not just know, that the person you’ve dedicated your life to is really there to be your partner. They’re on your team, and you are not alone.”

“We try to encourage each other in the faith, we try to live our faith as part of our daily lives. We try to make time for each of us to attend different retreats, and we all attend Family Guggenheim. Faith helps us and we have an awareness that we need to offer each other grace and space in our daily lives. We belong to St. Joseph’s parish in Boonville (which Tyler has attended all his life). In the past, we have taught Confirmation preparation there, and helped out with building and beautification projects.”

Asked what advice they might give to newly married couples, Tyler and Megan are happy to share what they have learned.

“The more you learn to give of yourself, the smoother life goes. The more you focus on yourself or act selfishly, the harder everything is. Be honest! Don’t lie, conceal, or be manipulative. Try to be patient. Listen more than you talk and remember that the person sharing with you is dear to you. They are your partner in life, so try not to write off what they’re saying. Be honest. Don’t allow suspicion or a lack of trust to enter your relationship. Put your marriage first. Remember that children need parents with a strong marriage because that is what makes a strong family.”

And, of course, the couple concludes, “Give the other person support in their walk with the Lord, but do not nag. Stay close to the sacraments, especially confession. Do NFP together; it has many far-reaching and unexpected benefits. Make it something you figure out together and it will help your relationship. Make parish life a part of your family life. Don’t just go on Sundays, but live the liturgical calendar, be involved, find families in a similar state in life and befriend them. Go to conferences and retreats: Men’s and Women’s Conferences in Syracuse; The King’s Men; Present in the Pain, which helps deal with the loss of a child through the lens of Catholic faith. Make use of your diocesan Family Life Office. And go to Family Guggenheim!”
Natural Family Planning considered

By Suzanne Pietropaoli
Co-Director, Diocesan Natural Family Planning Office

Congratulations! Perhaps you are newly married, or perhaps you are still busy getting ready for the big day. Issues and adjustments of all kinds demand your attention, and it might be easy to let some things just slide. Even so, starting a new life together is the perfect time for the two of you to have a heart-to-heart talk about family planning.

Really? Wasn’t that all settled at the clinic or the doctor’s office? Well, that is the first thing to consider: being a fertile woman is not a disease that needs medical treatment. The ability to conceive and bear children is a good and healthy thing, and the alternating phases of female fertility and infertility have been well-documented for nearly a century. Today any woman can learn to understand her own fertility by observing its physical signs or biomarkers. These reflect the hormonal changes that govern the female cycle and indicate times of fertility and infertility within that cycle. Natural Family Planning teaches women to identify and evaluate these changes.

This knowledge gives her an entirely natural, healthy, highly effective (98-99% effective) way to plan a family - simply by abstaining during the fertile time of the cycle. Also, because Natural Family Planning is true family planning, the same knowledge enables couples to identify the optimum time for conception when that is their family planning intention. NFP is also unique because responsibility for conception is shared by both husband and wife. After all, since a woman is fertile only a few days each cycle and a man is continuously fertile from puberty until death, it hardly makes sense that she should bear the burden of risky contraceptives.

And yes, the hormonal contraceptives currently used by 61 million American women carry significant health risks. Learn all you can, even if you may need a magnifying glass to read the fine print in the package inserts. This information will alert you to some of the immediate medical risks faced by women who use the Pill and other chemical contraceptives. In addition to raising the risk of blood clots, heart attacks, strokes, gallbladder disease and depression, these chemicals substantially increase the lifetime risk of breast cancer. (Learn more at https://bcpinst.org, website of the Breast Cancer Prevention Institute.) Let the facts inform your choices.

There are also other values to consider in your approach to family planning. Couples who choose contraceptive drugs and devices view fertility as a problem - HER problem, which she must fix. But of course, a fertile woman is not broken or defective, but is perfectly healthy.

Natural Family Planning recognizes this truth and educates couples to accept and respect the woman in her totality. NFP empowers women: family planning is no longer a female “problem,” but a responsibility shared by husband and wife. Knowledge is always powerful, and learning to understand and respect how our bodies are designed has a powerful influence on couples who use it. It fosters attentiveness, appreciation, patience, and communication, which tend to strengthen a couple’s relationship.

It is also important to consider this question in light of God’s plan for married love. Especially in a culture that regards sex as something that human beings fashion for themselves, it is essential to consider sexuality from the perspective of the God who made it, and all of us.

When you stand before the altar of God on your wedding day, you promise yourselves to one another in a love that is free, permanent, faithful and open to the gift of children. This is the kind of love with which God loves us, and it is the absolutely unconditional love for which we all long. It is the love that God intends should be embodied in every act of sexual intercourse, an act that by its nature says: “I love you totally. I give all of myself to you forever, and I freely and completely accept all that you are.” Yet contracepted intercourse says something quite different: “I love you, but not all of you. I give myself to you, but not all of me. I withhold my fertility /I will not accept your fertility.” In this way, married love can become conditional, demanding, and divisive rather than uniting a couple in giving and receiving the total gift of each to the other.

At every level – health, effectiveness, relationship, faith – God’s plan is good. Time spent learning it yields tremendous benefits over a lifetime. NFP methods, and modes of learning, have evolved to include many online options, as well as in-person classes. Different NFP methodologies appeal to different people, and there is certainly something that will suit your preferences. The Catholic Church, which has always taught and continues to teach that God made sex to be both unitive AND procreative, has endorsed natural methods of birth regulation for the better part of a century and supported research and teaching organizations. Such organizations approved by the Church thus have long histories of reliability, which is not the case for the many random fertility awareness methods currently crowding the internet. The most comprehensive single site for this information is hosted by the US Conference of Catholic Bishops: https://www.usccb.org/topics/natural-family-planning. and some 900 faithful attended the mass. The Korean Catholic Church has confirmed that it will do everything possible to be an instrument of reconciliation and unity of the Korean people. The Eucharist for Unity has been celebrated every year on June 25 since 1965, the archbishop recalled. “The reconciliation and peace of the Korean people are more necessary than ever today,” he added, as international political circumstances surrounding Korea have gradually worsened, and tension and military escalation in the confrontation between South and North Korea.

Msgr. Chung also wanted to lament the current internal South Korean situation, pointing out: “The culture of hatred, the exclusion of people who have a different position from ours, strongly permeates communication. The time has come for relations to overcome 70 years of conflict and seek authentic coexistence,” he stressed.

The archbishop concluded his homily by inviting the faithful to pray together so that the two Koreas do not threaten each other but take steps to restore mutual trust and “courageously walk the path of reconciliation and forgiveness, even if it is a long and difficult process.” “Let us always remember our brothers and sisters in the North, who are suffering from food and medicine shortages, and let us not tire of praying for true peace on the Korean peninsula,” he concluded.

- Article from FIDES missionary news service of the Pontifical Mission Societies.
The U.S. Supreme Court issued a unanimous ruling Thursday in favor of a Christian postal worker who says he was targeted and disciplined by his employer for refusing to work on Sundays because of his religious beliefs.

In its ruling in Groff v. DeJoy, written by Justice Samuel Alito, the court said federal law requires an employer that denies an employee a religious accommodation must show that the burden of the accommodation would result in substantial increased costs.

The court rejected the “de minimis” interpretation of the “Hardison Standard,” which has been used to deny employees’ religious accommodation requests if they present more than a “trivial cost” to the employer.

The Hardison Standard, established in the 1977 case TWA v. Hardison, interpreted Title VII of the Civil Rights Act to mean that employers were not obligated to accommodate workers’ religious requests if they posed more than a trivial cost. The court’s decision Thursday overturns that interpretation.

“The erroneous de minimis interpretation of Hardison may have had the effect of leading courts to apply insufficient attention to what the actual text of Title VII means with regard to several recurring issues,” Alito wrote.

“What is most important is that ‘undue hardship’ in Title VII means what it says,” the decision’s syllabus said. “Courts should resolve whether a hardship would be substantial in the context of an employer’s business in the commonsense manner that it would use in applying any such test.”

“Though granting that ‘Title VII requires an assessment of a possible accommodation’s effect on the conduct of the employer’s business,’” Alito wrote that “impacts on coworkers are relevant only to the extent those impacts go on to affect the conduct of the business.”

Alito clarified that bias or hostility toward religion cannot be considered a factor in determining whether to grant a religious accommodation request.

“A hardship that is attributable to employee animosity to a particular religion, to religion in general, or to the very notion of accommodating religious practice cannot be considered ‘undue,’” Alito said. “If bias or hostility to a religious practice or a religious accommodation provided a defense to a reasonable accommodation claim, Title VII would be at war with itself.”

Besides rejecting the de minimis interpretation, the Supreme Court returned Groff’s case to lower courts to be examined under the new standard.

“Without foreclosing the possibility that USPS will prevail, we think it appropriate to leave it to the lower courts to apply our clarified context-specific standard and to decide whether any further factual development is needed,” Alito wrote.

At the heart of this case is Gerald Groff, a former postal worker who is also an evangelical missionary.

In 2019, Groff resigned from his position with the U.S. Postal Service (USPS) after years of allegedly being harassed, targeted, and disciplined for refusing to work Sundays so that he could abide by the Third Commandment, to “keep holy the sabbath day.”

Groff then sued the USPS for violating his religious rights.

After his claims were denied by both a Pennsylvania district court and the 3rd Circuit Court, the Supreme Court agreed to take up his appeal in January.

The court’s decision is expected to have a major impact on the religious rights of employees across the country.

According to the religious liberty law firm Becket, under the Hardison precedent, 86% of workplace religious accommodation requests are denied. “Hardison’s ‘de minimis test’ has been used by large companies to deny even the most basic of religious accommodations for their employees — especially employees with minority religious beliefs,” the law firm said.

“Big corporations got away with firing employees for their religious practices for decades, thanks to a fundamental misunderstanding of civil rights law,” Becket President Mark Rienzi said in a press release in response to the court’s ruling.

“Today was a win for the little guy — all those who want to live and work in accordance with their religious beliefs,” Rienzi added. “The Supreme Court has made it so hard working religious Americans no longer have to choose between their job and their faith.”

Bishops rebuke Catholic Democrats supporting abortion

The United States Catholic Conference of Bishops (USCCB) has issued a strong response to a group of Catholic lawmakers who signed a letter citing Catholic teaching in support of abortion. The group of 30 Democrats, led by Connecticut Rep. Rosa DeLauro, cited their Catholic faith and St. John Paul II’s apostolic exhortation Christifideslaus Laici as reasons to support abortion.

“The fundamental tenets of our Catholic faith — social justice, conscience, and religious freedom — compel us to defend a woman’s right to access abortion,” the letter stated. “[Our] faith unfaithfully promotes the common good, prioritizes the dignity of every human being, and highlights the need to provide a collective safety net to our most vulnerable.”

Archbishop Timothy P. Broglio, president of the USCCB; Bishop Michael E. Burbidge of Arlington, Virginia, chairman of the USCCB’s Committee of Pro-Life Activities; and Bishop Daniel E. Flores of Brownsville, Texas, chairman of the USCCB’s Committee on Doctrine, issued a joint corrective statement in response: “Members of Congress who recently invoked teachings of the Catholic faith itself as justifying abortion or supporting a supposed right to abortion grievously distort the faith. It is wrong and incoherent to claim that the taking of innocent human life at its most vulnerable stage can ever be consistent with the values of supporting the dignity and well-being of those in need,” the U.S. bishops wrote.

Half a million Catholics abandon Church in Germany

The Catholic Church in Germany is facing an unprecedented crisis, with more than half a million baptized Catholics leaving the Church in 2022, according to figures released by the German Bishops’ Conference on June 28. This marks the highest number of departures ever recorded, with 522,821 people choosing to leave the Church, according to the German-language partner news agency. The total number of departures, including deaths, exceeded 708,000, a stark contrast to the 155,173 baptisms and 1,447 new members recorded during the same period. The figures reveal a historic negative trend, with the number of departures doubling from over 270,000 in 2020 to the current record. Despite these departures, Church statistics for 2022 show that nearly 21 million people in Germany remained officially Catholic by the end of the year, representing 24.8% of the country’s resident population of 84.4 million. Several German bishops expressed dismay over the figures. Bishop Stefan Oster of Passau described the numbers as “frighteningly high,” while Bishop Bertram Meier of Augsburg acknowledged the Church’s need to regain trust with “patience and credibility.” A 2021 report by CNA Deutsch noted that 1 in 3 Catholics in Germany were considering leaving the Church. The reasons for leaving vary, with older people citing the Church’s handling of the abuse crisis and younger people pointing to the obligation of paying church tax, according to one earlier study.

From playing Jesus to ‘Sound of Freedom’

By Francesca Pollio Fenton
Catholic News Agency

Catholic audiences know actor Jim Caviezel for his iconic performances in movies such as “The Passion of the Christ” and “The Count of Monte Cristo.” His latest film, “Sound of Freedom,” which will be released by Angel Studios in theaters nationwide on July 4, is, in his view, among his best work.

Caviezel plays Homeland Security agent Tim Ballard, who, after rescuing a young boy from traffickers, learns that the boy’s sister is still captive. He quits his job and puts his life at risk as he embarks on a dangerous journey through the Colombian jungle to save the little girl.

In 2013, Ballard and a number of former government operatives left their jobs to found Operation Underground Railroad (O.U.R.), which works around the world and in conjunction with law enforcement to rescue children from slavery and exploitation.

Caviezel spoke with CNA about the upcoming film, the impact it had on him, and the effect he hopes it will have on others.

“This is the best film I’ve done since the ‘Passion of the Christ,’” he said. “This film is phenomenal and it is worth being seen.”

Caviezel was drawn to playing Ballard in the film. “As an actor, it’s kind of like a baseball player where you have a particular pitch you like, and when you connect to it, you can hit it out of the park, and with this one, I felt I could do that.”

Caviezel spoke about the work that went into preparing for the role. He and the real Tim Ballard spent time training, specifically in close-quarter combat, and Caviezel even joined Ballard on missions.

“I go and literally sit in on these missions and I’m watching him and his analysis of what he sees. And it has to be done very methodically. And I’m trying to find out who he is and what I am and how we’re similar,” he recalled.

While filming, a group of Navy Seals and other armed forces were assigned as protection. Caviezel, unaware at the time, shared the story of the day of filming where there was no protection. He later found out that the group of special forces went out and saved 100 children from traffickers that day.

The actor, a devout Catholic, hopes that people will leave the movie theater with “a new heart.”

“A heart that’s not afraid,” he added. “I was praying the other day and I said, ‘Can we love God’s children more than we fear evil?’ Can we love Jesus more than we fear the cross?”

And this is the problem right now with modern-day Christians is that we want the easy route. And right now you see the world changing. You’re going to have to make a decision at some point.

“There’s good, there’s evil. But a big part of that evil is those that are sitting on the fence. And we have to make a choice. And some are more leaning towards Jesus, more towards good, some are more leaning towards the evil, but they’re on that fence and that fence belongs to the evil one,” he continued. “And so we have to make that decision... And I love that about Tim Ballard. He’s a battle hero’s story.”

About 2 million children are trafficked every year worldwide. The United States is considered one of the top destinations for victims of child trafficking and cases have been reported in all 50 states. According to a 2019 report from the Human Trafficking Hotline, California, Texas, Florida, Ohio, and New York rank at the top with the most cases. There are more than 350,000 children who go missing in the U.S. each year. Of those 350,000, it is estimated that roughly 100,000 are being trafficked.

“God’s children are no longer for sale,” is a powerful line in the film, and Caviezel told CNA why he believes children are under attack, not just through child trafficking, as seen in the movie, but also through abortion. (According to the Guttmacher Institute, almost 1 million abortions took place in the United States in 2020.)

“The most vulnerable are under attack for one reason – children are the most innocent of humans,” Caviezel said.

“It wounds God to the deepest core to kill those unborn babies, but now they kill them when they’re born, don’t they?” He continued: “That’s where Jesus is going to have a deep conversation with all of us when we die, and I don’t want to be a part of that. I want to tell him that I love him. That’s what I want to say. And that I tried to live the life that it was supposed to be, that I give my life for him. Because he deserves to be loved.”

“Pope John Paul said, ‘Every generation of Americans needs to know that freedom exists not to do what you like but having the right to do what you ought.’ That’s the freedom I wish for you, for us. Freedom from sin, freedom from our weaknesses, freedom from the slavery that sin makes out of all of us. That is the freedom that is worth dying for.”

“I’m here because this warrior saint, Tim Ballard, gave his life and continues to do it to go down to the cartel, risking his head like John the Baptist did. Risking his head like St. Paul did,” he said.

Angel Studios, an American media company and film distribution studio that uses equity crowdfunding to finance its productions and is known for the popular series “The Chosen,” is encouraging “Sound of Freedom” supporters and viewers to ‘pay it forward’ so those who might not be able to see the movie can claim a free ticket.

The studio’s goal is to have 2 million people attend the film’s opening weekend to represent the estimated 2 million children trafficked each year.

Summer is here! And it’s just so good to enjoy longer days and brighter evenings. At the same time, the prospects of another summer under the shadow of the corona virus, the persecuted Christians in so many countries, floods, fires, and cyclones, casts a dark cloud over our joy. We need to listen carefully to the first reading from Zechariah. It can refresh our spirits.

The vision of the King of Peace coming to abolish all fighting is a cause for hope. And, of course, it’s more than a dream, since we are children of the Covenant. God has promised us a time of peace. We must never give up on the dream of our founding fathers and mothers.

After all, our country was founded on a dream. Otherwise we would not be celebrating the Fourth of July this weekend. Their dream is very like God’s dream. We are all entitled to be dreamers. We must never give up hope that God’s dream of peace will come true. It’s possible! There’s nothing wrong with the American Dream. It’s based on reality of God’s dream, so whatever we dream and work for in America is based on his principles of life. Why are politicians so unwilling to give life a chance? God gave us a chance before we were ever born!!

How do we help make His plan come true? By speaking out - not being afraid or timid of our Catholic principles. By living in the Spirit as our second reading explains. As members of Christ, every good individual action strengthens the whole body.

We need to faithfully pray for peace, respond with serene charity to the many frustrations and “downers” in our lives, and influence others to do the same. Living in the Spirit will reduce our tendencies to live in the flesh and all its temptations. It is called choosing the narrow door. Of course, we live in the flesh – from hugs to hot dogs - but it’s so easy to let our desires get out of hand. More prayer, more getting out of ourselves to think of other people brings lightness of heart and freedom of Spirit.

When we’re scared and think that it’s just too hard, think of the Lord’s words in today’s Gospel: “Come to me all you who labor and are heavily burdened and I will refresh you.” In other words, Jesus says to us “Here, give it to me. I’ll carry it for a while.” Just listen to the Spirit.

There is nothing quite as embarrassing as crashing into a priest or fellow deacon during Mass. I have had that happen once or twice. It was never intentional. Perhaps I zigged when I should have zagged. Most people in the pews never saw it happen or forgot about it almost immediately. We score those bumps “incidental contact.”

The collision becomes more memorable if someone is knocked to the deck.

That almost never happens. At least it never happened to me, thank you, God.

Which brings me to the point of this column. Things like stepping into someone’s path by mistake or being where you shouldn’t be at any given time will happen during a live event, performance or show.

Mass is no different. We try not to think of Mass as live theater, but the similarities are striking. Without some pre-planning, in theater it is called “blocking,” people are bound to crash into each other.

The Mass, according to New Advent Catholic Encyclopedia, is “The complex of prayers and ceremonies that make up the service of the Eucharist in the Latin rites.”

Many of the movements by the priest Celebrant, the assisting deacon, the servers and the other ministers have been prescribed in the rituals published by the Church or are planned ahead of time by the ministers.

In my parish, for example, the lector comes to the ambo from the congregation after the opening prayer, reads from scripture and stays in the sanctuary until after the Prayer of the Faithful. It might be slightly different where you attend Mass. It is nice and orderly.

The deacon usually kneels from the Epiclesis until after the chalice with the Blood of Christ is lowered by the celebrant. The Epiclesis, by the way, is “the prayer petitioning God to send the Holy Spirit so that the offerings at the Eucharist may become the Body and Blood of Christ.”

If the deacon has bad knees, or an unfor-giving back, he might remain standing. That’s allowed.

The deacon proclaims the Gospel. Let’s say the celebrant is preaching. When they swap places at the ambo, they might have to cross each other in the sanctuary.

Some parishes work out how they will meet, bow and cross so there is no confusion, and a potential accident, at the exchange of places. That’s good planning.

Things get complicated when more people are added to the participant list. Maybe there are concelebrating priests or additional deacons. The occasion might include first communicants or confirmands. Blocking their movements is part of the planning.

If all goes right, you will never be distracted from your principal reason for being at Mass; to thank God for all he has done for you and to worship Him.

The last thing any of us needs is a minister not paying attention and crashing into the incense bearer. I can see that server tripping and falling to the ground with a thurbule full of lighted coals and incense. That must have happened somewhere. Not in our diocese, but somewhere.

Planning might have avoided the original collision.

Friar gets jail for blocking abortion clinic

By Tyler Arnod
Catholic News Agency

Catholic priest and pro-life activist Father Fidelis Moscinski, CFR, has been sentenced to six months in federal prison for blocking access to a Planned Parenthood abortion facility by placing locks and chains on the gated entrance.

Judge Steven Tiscioni laid down the six-month sentence, which is the maximum available for the specific crime. Moscinski was found guilty of violating the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances (FACE) Act, which imposes harsh penalties for obstructing access to an abortion facility or a pregnancy center.

“My actions ... were done because Planned Parenthood as an organization is in the business of killing,” Moscinski told the judge while asking for a lenient sentence, according to his remarks provided by the pro-life organization Red Rose Rescue.

Although the priest is a member of Red Rose Rescue, the organization has emphasized that his effort to block access to an abortion clinic was not sanctioned by the group. Red Rose Rescue said members can engage in pro-life activism outside of their organization, but they are a sole agent when doing so.

“Every procured abortion that occurs on [Planned Parenthood’s] premises constitutes the deliberate killing of an innocent human being,” Moscinski continued in his statement to the judge. “Furthermore, these bloody and violent acts also cause grave spiritual and psychological harm to the mother of the child. All of my actions then and now are directed solely towards preventing the murder of defenseless children and the wounding of their mothers.”
Father Solomon takes naturalization oath

By Darcy Fargo
Editor

“There’s this feeling of joy. This is a great, great thing. I thank God for calling me to this journey and for this blessing.”

That’s how Father Fernando Solomon described taking his Naturalization Oath of Allegiance to the United States of America and becoming a U.S. citizen.

Father Solomon pledged that oath at a ceremony held Friday, June 23, in Clinton County Court before state Supreme Court Justice John T. Ellis.

“For this part of the process, naturalization, I applied last year in June,” Father Solomon said. “After six months, I received a reply scheduling an interview. I interviewed in Colchester, Vermont. After the interview, I waited a few months before this naturalization ceremony.”

“The visa is good for three to five years,” he explained. “Before the three years expired, usually six months before, I had to renew. I was on that renewal when I started preparing for my Green Card. I got that earlier than expected, and I stayed on my Green Card for 3 years. Then, I was qualified to apply for citizenship.”

Initially, Father Solomon said he considered remaining in the U.S. on the Green Card. “Thinking and praying about it, I decided I am going to be here for the rest of my life, and God brought me here. I decided to apply for citizenship.”

Father Solomon was joined by individuals from around the world in taking the oath of allegiance on June 23. He was also joined by Bishop Terry R. LaValley, priests of the diocese and parishioners from Malone and Port Henry. Pictured are (from left) Father Leagon Carroll, Msgr. Dennis Duprey, state Supreme Court Justice John T. Ellis, Father Solomon, Bishop LaValley, Father Al Hauser and Father Medenel Angrand.

also criticized the FACE Act.

“This pseudo-law seeks to cloak the act of killing preborn children under the euphemistic and Orwellian language of ‘reproductive health care,’” Moscinski said. “I am not guilty of violating this law because this law cannot be seen as anything other than null and void since it attempts to give legal protection to actions which are intrinsically evil and unjust.”

Moscinski asked Tiscione to “somewhat mitigate the injustice this court has perpetrated” by providing him the most lenient sentence possible. Instead, the judge handed him the most severe sentence and cited his previous arrests for pro-life activism as his justification for the sentence.

The priest’s pro-life activism occurred on the morning of July 7, 2022, at the Planned Parenthood of Greater New York clinic in Hempstead, New York. He effectively shut down the clinic for about two hours by placing locks and chains on the entrance and covering some of them with glue, according to the Department of Justice.

Once the fire department and police department cut through the locks, Moscinski laid down in front of the entrance to prevent cars from entering the gate, according to a press release from the U.S. Attorney’s Office.

Moscinski has previously been arrested for his pro-life activism, but this is the first time he has been found guilty of violating the FACE Act. Last year, he was arrested for trespassing in an abortion clinic after entering the facility in protest and refusing to leave when ordered by staff and then by police.

Earlier this month, New York Attorney General Letitia James filed a lawsuit against Red Rose Rescue that seeks to bar Moscinski and other members of Red Rose Rescue from going within 30 feet of an abortion clinic. Even though Moscinski’s FACE Act violation was not part of a Red Rose Rescue, the attorney general cited that incident as one of the incidents to justify the lawsuit.
